AMERICAN NURSES ASSN. (representing 180,000 professional nurses) -- The ANA campaigned unsuccessfully for legislation providing federal aid to collegiate schools of nursing. It lined up in opposition to the AMA on the issue of health care for the aged, supporting the plan to finance the benefits through an increase in Social Security taxes.

● The nurses in 1961 will renew their efforts to get a program of federal aid for college nursing schools.

Transportation

AIR TRANSPORT ASSN. OF AMERICA (representing 47 certificated air carriers) -- Leo Seybold of ATA's legislative department said the 1960 Congressional session produced no major legislation either adverse to or beneficial to the Air Transport Assn.

● With the law providing federal funds to communities for airport construction due to expire June 30, 1961, Seybold said the ATA will support new legislation to extend the program and to increase the amounts made available for airport-aid. He said the ATA also will oppose proposed legislation that would prohibit the Post Office Department from transporting any mail unless it carried air mail postage.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE INSTITUTE (50 merchant marine companies) -- Among the measures supported by the AMMI and enacted by Congress in 1960 were a bill increasing from 50 to 55 percent the ceiling on Government subsidies for domestic merchant marine shipping (HR 10644 -- PL 86-607); a bill to permit merchant marine operators to spread depreciation and amortization mortgage charges over 25 years instead of 20 years on post-war-built ships (HR 10646 -- PL 86-518); a bill to permit unsubsidized operators of war-built ships, except tankers, to trade them in for more modern war-built vessels in the Government reserve fleet (S 2618 -- PL 86-575); and a bill extending for another year the dual rate contract system under which members of steamship conferences give preferential contracts to firms who agree to use exclusively the shipping services of the conference members (HR 10840 -- PL 86-542).

Opposed by the AMMI in 1960 was a provision of the minimum wage bill which would have brought 100,000 seamen under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

● In 1961 the AMMI will support legislation setting up an international travel office in the Government. It also will oppose any broad changes in the dual rate contract system.

AMERICAN TRUCKING ASSNS. (representing 50 state trucking associations and 11 truckers' conferences) -- A spokesman for ATA said there was no major legislation considered by Congress during 1960 affecting the trucking industry.

● The Association in 1961 will oppose efforts to let railroads go into the trucking business.

ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN RAILROADS (representing 196 railroads in the U.S., Canada and Mexico) -- Gregory S. Prince, vice president and general counsel, said Congress enacted "practically no legislation having special significance for the railroad industry."

● AAR's legislative program for 1961 has yet to be established, Prince said, but "it is reasonable to assume that the railroads' objectives will remain much the same as they have heretofore been, with emphasis on the need for realization of a greater degree of equality of competitive opportunity to be obtained through equal and impartial treatment of the several forms of transportation."

Veterans

AMERICAN LEGION (representing approximately 3 million veterans of World War I, World War II and Korea) -- The Legion failed to get action on a bill (HR 11045) reopening the National Service Life Insurance program to veterans of World War II and Korea whose policies had expired. The legislation died in the House Rules Committee. It also was disappointed that the Senate did not adopt a resolution (S Res 19) creating a Veterans' Affairs Committee in the Senate.

The Legion did help to block enactment of a bill (S 2929) repealing the disclaimer affidavit in the National Defense Education Act and worked against the resolution (S Res 94) which proposed to repeal the Connally amendment to the World Court treaty.

● In 1961 the Legion will continue to press for legislation to reopen the NSLI program and to set up a veterans' committee in the Senate.

CQ Fact Sheet On Lobby Spending, 1959

PRESSURE GROUPS SPENT $4.3 MILLION ON LOBBYING IN 1959

Money spent by organized Washington pressure groups to influence Congress in 1959 topped $4 million for the second successive year. Lobby spending, as reported to Congress by the lobbies themselves, totaled $4,281,468.35, a slight increase over the 1958 figure. (See box, next page and 1959 Almanac p. 678)

Congressional Quarterly's tabulation of lobby spending during 1959 was based on the financial reports submitted by 280 registered pressure groups during the year. Under the 1946 Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act, groups spending money to influence Congressional legislation must register with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House and must file reports showing how much they spent each quarter. (See box p. 657)

Teamsters Lead

A major development revealed by the Congressional Quarterly survey was the emergence of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters as a high-powered pressure group. Because of its opposition to various labor measures considered by Congress in 1959, the Teamsters Union added its name to the roster of registered lobby groups June 29, 1959. By the end of the second quarter, only a day later, the 1.6 million-member union reported that it had spent over $19,000. During the third quarter, July 1 to Sept. 30, the Teamsters put out more than $177,000 in an unsuccessful abortive attempt to forestall the passage of a "tough" labor bill. It was during this quarter that the House debated the Teamster-opposed Landrum-Griffin bill (HR 8400) which formed the basis of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 (PL 86-257). (1959 Almanac p. 156)

By the end of the year, the Teamsters reported spending $242,951.95 on lobbying, over $100,000 more than the second highest spender, the Temporary Committee on Taxation of the Mutual Life Insurance Companies.

The Temporary Committee spent $140,565.76 through the first three-quarters of 1959. It failed to file a report for the fourth quarter. The life insurance industry in 1959 lobbied for modifications in a bill setting up a new formula for taxing the income of insurance firms. President Eisenhower signed the bill into law June 25 (PL 86-69). (1959 Almanac p. 203)

In listing the spending reports, Congressional Quarterly has divided all the active lobby groups into six broad categories reflecting general legislative interests. In all, 151 of the groups reporting their spending during 1959 were engaged in business or in the promotion of business interests. They spent $1,761,556.43.

Thirty-four employee and labor groups, led by the Teamsters, reported spending $1,217,360.60. The legislative department of the AFL-CIO spent $132,053.95; other AFL-CIO departments and affiliates put out an additional $594,057.21.

The professional category, which includes the American Medical Assn. and the National Education Assn., reported expenditures of $344,640.47. Organizations representing various civic and social welfare interests, such as the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and the National Women's Christian Temperance Union, said they spent $512,606.66. The farm lobby, led by the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Farmers Union, spent $314,552.35 to influence the lawmakers, and the veterans' lobby, led by the American Legion, spent $130,751.84.

Tariff Group Drops

One organization which in recent years was near the top among lobby spenders almost dropped out of sight during 1959. The American Tariff League Inc., which reported spending almost $132,000 in 1958, spent only $8,784.00 in 1959. The League, a protectionist group founded in 1885, underwent reorganization July 1, 1959. It changed its name to the Trade Relations Council of the U.S. and apparently either drastically cut down its lobbying activities or it changed its reporting techniques.

One of the weaknesses of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act is that it permits pressure groups to decide for themselves what they shall report as lobby expenditures. Some organizations list all of their expenses -- salaries, overhead costs and administrative expenses; others say only a small percentage of their total expenditures can be regarded as lobby spending.

280 REGISTERED LOBBIES AND WHAT THEY SPENT IN 1959

Following is a list of 280 registered lobby groups and the amounts each reported spending in 1959 for lobbying activities. The organizations are divided alphabetically into six categories: Business, Citizens, Employee and Labor, Farm, Military and Veterans, and Professional. Not all groups reported for each quarter; the number of asterisks following spending figures indicates the last quarter for which report was made: a single asterisk (*) for the first quarter, a double asterisk () for the second quarter, three asterisks () for the third. All others reported at end of fourth quarter. Groups that filed reports but reported no spending are marked "None."

Law on Spending Reports

The Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act of 1946 requires spending reports to be filed quarterly by anybody who "directly or indirectly, solicits, collects or receives money or any other thing of value to be used principally to aid, or the principal purpose of which person is to aid, in the accomplishment of any of the following purposes: (a) the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the U.S.; (b) to influence, directly or indirectly, the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the U.S." A Supreme Court decision in 1954 (U.S. v. Harriss, 347 US 612) in effect limited the lobby law's applicability to "direct communication with Members of Congress."

The Act's vagueness on what constitutes lobby spending permits pressure groups to decide for themselves what they shall report as lobby expenditures. The Act specifies that all registered organizations file financial reports by the 10th day of the month following the end of the quarter.

CQ Fact Sheet On Lobby Spending, First Half of 1960

LOBBIES REPORT NEARLY $2 MILLION SPENT IN SIX MONTHS

Lobby organizations reported spending a total of $1,814,694 during the first six months of 1960 in their attempts to influence legislation before Congress.

Congressional Quarterly arrived at this total by checking all the lobby spending reports filed between Jan. 1 and July 20, 1960. The Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act of 1946 requires organizations to file quarterly reports with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House showing how much they spent to influence legislation. The amount spent by pressure groups during the first two quarters of 1960 was slightly under the $1,877,803 spent during the first half of 1959.

In all, 255 organizations filed spending reports. Many others active on Capitol Hill had not filed spending reports as of July 20, although the reports were technically due July 10. The 1946 Lobby Act did not designate anyone to enforce its provisions. It also is vague in regard to what spending organizations must report. Several organizations, including the National Assn. of Manufacturers and Americans for Democratic Action, do not file spending reports on the ground that their "principal purpose" is not to influence legislation.

The Act requires spending reports to be filed quarterly by anybody who "directly or indirectly, solicits, collects or receives money or any other thing of value to be used principally to aid, or the principal purpose of which person is to aid, in the accomplishment of any of the following purposes: (a) the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the U.S.; (b) to influence, directly or indirectly, the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the U.S." A Supreme Court decision in 1954 (U.S. v. Harriss, 347 US 612) in effect limited the lobby law's applicability to "direct communication with Members of Congress."

NEA Leads

Of the organizations that did file spending reports for the first half of 1960, the National Education Assn. led with $77,913. The NEA, as in other recent years, lobbied hard in 1960 for legislation to provide federal aid to schools. Both the House and Senate passed different versions of school-aid legislation, but when Congress adjourned Sept. 1, both measures were tied up in the House Rules Committee.

Next highest spenders, according to the official reports, were the AFL-CIO and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters with reported expenditures of $62,882 and $55,810. Fourth was the American Farm Bureau Federation, the largest of several influential farm pressure groups.

Of the 255 groups reporting, 126 were engaged in business or in the promotion of business interests. They spent a total of $671,599. Employee and labor groups, 35 in all, reported expenditures of $489,342. The professional category, which includes the National Education Assn. and the American Medical Assn., reported expenditures of $195,082. Organizations representing various civic and social welfare interests, such as the National Housing Conference and the American Cancer Society, said they spent $242,460. The farm lobby, led by the Farm Bureau and the National Farmers Union, invested $169,914.55 in lobbying and veterans' organizations spent $46,297.

Top 21 Spenders

The top 21 of the 255 organizations filing lobby spending reports during the first half of 1960 are listed below, with comparative figures for 1959. All listed expenses in excess of $25,000.

255 LOBBY GROUPS LIST SPENDING FOR FIRST HALF OF 1960

Following is a list of 255 registered lobby groups and the amounts, if any, which each reported spending during the first six months of 1960 for lobbying activities. The organizations are divided into six categories: Business, Citizens, Employee and Labor, Farm, Military and Veterans and Professional. Many groups were late in reporting; an asterisk following an organization's name indicates that it filed a spending report for the first quarter of 1960 only. All others reported at the end of the second quarter. Groups not filing reports in either quarter are not listed.

CONGRESS FAILS TO EASE IRS RULES ON LOBBY DEDUCTIONS

Congress in 1960 failed to enact legislation to ease recent Internal Revenue Service rulings on tax deductions for lobbying expenses, despite widespread support for more lenient regulations by almost all pressure groups and many Congressmen.

A bill to change some of the rulings was reported July 1, 1960 by the House Ways and Means Committee (HR 7123 -- H Rept 2077), but was never considered on the House floor.

As reported, HR 7123 would have amended a 40-year-old tax statute. The law, currently a part of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (Section 162), spells out which business expenses are considered "ordinary and necessary" and thus can be deducted from taxable income. In an interpretation of the law in 1919, the Internal Revenue Service published regulations specifically barring the deduction of "sums of money expended for lobbying expenses, the promotion or defeat of legislation, the exploitation of propaganda, including advertising other than trade advertising...."

The IRS regulation has been tested and upheld several times by the Supreme Court, most recently Feb. 24, 1959 in the Straus -Cammarano cases. In that decision, the Court ruled that money spent on publicity to influence the outcome of initiatives and referenda was not deductible. In other decisions affirming the IRS over the years, the Court has disallowed deduction of lobby expenditures made for the following purposes: legal fees incurred in connection with appearances before the House Ways and Means Committee (Delaware Steeplechase and Race Assn. case); the cost of assembling facts and arguments for presentation to state legislatures (Mary E. Bellengrath case); expenditures for publicity designed to influence the opinions of the general public in connection with legislation pending before Congress (Textile Mills Securities Corp. case).

New Regulations

Following the Supreme Court's decision in the 1959 Straus-Cammarano cases, the Internal Revenue Service issued new regulations under Section 162 of the 1954 Code designed to supersede the regulations in effect since 1919. As it went into effect Dec. 28, 1959, the new rule, the IRS and the Treasury said, was merely a more detailed interpretation of Section 162. However, they met a storm of protest from dozens of trade associations, labor unions and Members of Congress.

In essence, the new regulation disallowed tax deductions for the same expenditures outlined in the 1919 ruling. In addition, it spelled out in detail the type of so-called institutional advertising by organizations or industries for which deductions would be barred.

Many organizations had used newspaper advertising to further their views on public issues. Many newspapers feared the new regulation would discourage this form of advertising, since the regulation specifically stated that deductions for such publicity would be prohibited in most cases.

The key provision in the new regulation, and the one which drew the most fire from organizations, was a section cutting down on deductions claimed by organization members for dues paid to the parent organization. According to the IRS, a member of an organization, such as the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. or the AFL-CIO, could deduct only part of the annual sum paid to the parent organization if a "substantial" part of the organization's activities were devoted to lobbying. Presumably, the percentage of dues a member could deduct would be in direct proportion to the percentage of the organization's activities considered non-lobbying.

Previously, members could deduct the full amount of dues and contributions as "ordinary and necessary" business expenses.

On November 12-13, 1959 the IRS held hearings on the proposed new tax regulation. Trade organizations testified that the new rule would force member companies to cut down on their contributions; corporations said they were worried about the effect on their public relations campaigns; advertising men and newspaper publishers foresaw a loss of revenue and the AFL-CIO disliked the ruling disallowing portions of union dues as a tax deduction.

A number of groups, including the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. and the Advertising Federation of America, asked that adoption of the new regulations be postponed until Congress had an opportunity to act on the matter.

The Public Relations Society of America said "expenditures to defend a business from...burdensome or punitive legislation...certainly are an allowable cost of doing business. (1959 Almanac p. 682)

Remedial Legislation

Several bills were introduced in the 86th Congress to provide varying degrees of tax relief for lobby expenditures. The broadest and most widely supported was HR 7123, introduced May 11, 1959 by Rep. Hale Boggs (D La.). The Boggs bill as introduced would have allowed tax deductions for "expenses lawfully incurred in supporting or opposing or otherwise influencing legislation in the Congress or in a state legislature or in the legislative body of a county or other local governmental agency or in any submission of proposed legislation to the voters." In short, the Boggs bill would have permitted tax deductions for each form of lobby spending that had been disallowed by the IRS and the Supreme Court.

Less broad than HR 7123 and thus not as widely supported by lobbying organizations were four identical bills (HR 5193, 5251, 5579, and 6367) which sought to permit deductions for money spent by organizations on issues submitted directly to the electorate through initiatives and referenda. The practical effect of these bills would have been to reverse the Supreme Court's decision in the Straus -Cammarano cases.

A third approach to the lobby tax problem was proposed by the American Bar Assn. in hearings before the Ways and Means Committee on tax revision in February 1958. The ABA proposal, which was contained in a bill (HR 10591) introduced by Ways and Means Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.), permitted deductions for expenses incurred in direct appearances before legislative bodies, such as testimony before a Congressional committee.

1960 Drive

As the 1960 session of the 86th Congress began, the disgruntled organizations stepped up their drive to get Congress to free them from what they called "censorship by taxation." Many of the Members of Congress were sympathetic to the organizations' plaint.

It was argued by some that organized lobbies actually helped the legislators by making available much information which otherwise might have been missed. In introducing in the Senate a bill (S 3145) identical to the Boggs bill, Sen. Vance Hartke (D Ind.) March 7 said: "These organizations...have always provided legislators with the arguments both for and against legislative proposals. In fact, we in Congress benefit from the various points of view on legislation which we receive in public hearings from such organizations."

Boggs Feb. 11 warned Congress against becoming "insulated from public opinion". He said the enforcement of the IRS regulation "is of little or no significance as a revenue-raising device." This, he said, had been acknowledged by high officials in the Treasury Department and in IRS.

Treasury Views

At the request of the Ways and Means Committee, Fred A. Scribner Jr., Under Secretary of the Treasury, Feb. 26 submitted the Treasury Department's views on the various legislative proposals to amend the lobby tax law. According to Scribner, the Treasury recommended "early consideration by the Congress" of legislation to modify the law. A "desirable objective" of such legislation, the report said, would be to help "reduce rather than aggravate the practical administrative problems which are inherent in this area, and at the same time reduce to a minimum whatever inequalities among some taxpayers result from unavoidable imperfections in the administration of the law."

As to specific legislation, Scribner said the bills (HR 5193, 5251, 5579, 6367) to reverse the Supreme Court's decision in the Straus -Cammarano cases would "create a definite administrative problem". He said the language of the bills, which would permit deduction of expenditures to influence the outcome of issues "duly submitted to the electorate", was ambiguous and would result in a "new range of administrative problems and controversies".

He cautioned Congress not to adopt liberalizing legislation "without careful consideration of the need for proper safeguards. Such safeguards are not automatically provided by merely limiting the deductions to initiative or referendum measures. Safeguards which the Congress might want to consider would include definitions of the type of expenditures which would be deductible, possible limitation on the amount of the deduction based on the taxpayer's income or other appropriate standard, and possible requirements as to disclosure."

Scribner endorsed the proposal advanced by the American Bar Assn. "A reasonable approach which should not lend itself to abuse," he said, "would be the allowance of deduction of reasonable expenses directly connected with appearances and submissions at public hearings before committees of Congress or of any other comparable legislative body if such expenses otherwise satisfy the requirements of deductibility in the Code." Broader legislation may well be indicated, he said, but should be examined carefully.

Commerce Position

A letter from Secretary of Commerce Frederick H. Mueller to the Ways and Means Committee Feb. 25 said that the Commerce Department flatly recommended enactment of Boggs' bill. Mueller said it appeared to be "completely unrealistic" for the IRS to disallow deductions for lobby expenses on the grounds they were not "ordinary and necessary" business expenses when the life of the business might be threatened by proposed legislation. "Freedom of expression is an essential element of a free economy," the Secretary said.

Committee Action

The House Ways and Means Committee June 14 approved an amended version of the Boggs bill (HR 7123). The Committee bill provided that any expense which otherwise qualified as an ordinary and necessary business expense would not be disallowed as a deduction for income tax purposes because it was spent to influence action by Congress or other legislative bodies. Money spent to influence the outcome of legislative or constitutional proposals in initiatives, referenda or similar proceedings were also deductible under the Committee bill if it otherwise qualified as ordinary and necessary business expense.

The bill specified, however, that deductions would not be allowed for money spent in political campaigns on behalf of, or in opposition to, any candidate for public office.

In its report accompanying HR 7123 (H Rept 2077), the Committee said that the Treasury had no objection to the amended bill.

In giving its reasons for approving HR 7123, the Committee said it believed it "unreasonable to force either the Internal Revenue Service or the taxpayers to bear burdens of administration and compliance such as those produced by the rule of the (new) regulations." The Committee said the bill was intended to reverse the IRS regulations.

It also said it was "anomalous" that lobbying expenses were not deductible, while amounts spent before administrative and judicial bodies were "clearly deductible if they otherwise constitute ordinary and necessary business expenses."

Following the approval of HR 7123 by the Ways and Means Committee, the AFL-CIO June 17 called on the House to reject the measure.

In a letter to House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas), Andrew J. Biemiller (ex-Rep., D Wis. 1945-47, 1949-51), legislative director of the AFL-CIO, said the bill "would be highly detrimental to the public as a whole and could constitute an unwarranted and substantial loss to the Treasury."

Biemiller said passage of the measure would benefit only "a few individual members of the AFL-CIO" by permitting them to deduct from their gross income the entire amount of their union dues. Making lobbying expenses deductible, Biemiller said, would lead to a tremendous increase in lobbying, "just as the deductibility of expenses for business entertaining has led to an enormous increase in business entertaining...."

An AFL-CIO spokesman explained to Congressional Quarterly that the union had testified against the regulations at the November 1959 hearings because of the administrative burden they would impose on the IRS and the taxpayer. The union also opposed HR 7123, he said, because business interests stood to benefit more from the tax deductions. He said the union dues which would be deductible under the bill were slight compared to the contributions made by business firms and corporations to national trade associations for lobbying purposes.

CQ Fact Sheet — On Lobby Registrations

LOBBY REGISTRATIONS FOR 1960 DROP SHARPLY

The number of persons and organizations registering as lobbyists on Capitol Hill during the first eight months of 1960 dropped to a figure little more than half the total recorded in 1959. (For list, see p. 667)

Between Jan. 1 and Sept. 1, 1960, only 215 lobby registrations were filed with Congress under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act, compared to 393 during the previous year. This brought the total number of persons and groups registering under the Act during the first 15 years of its existence to 5,751.

With only the last 4 months remaining in the year, a period during which lobby activity on Capitol Hill is ordinarily at a standstill, the 1960 lobby registration figure was expected to be the lowest since 1952, when 204 registrations were filed. It represents a drop of 45 percent from the 1959 total, easily the biggest single-year decline ever recorded. The greatest one-year total of lobby registrations, 731, was recorded in the first full year the lobby law was in effect, 1947. (See box)

Lobby Law

The lobby law was enacted by Congress in 1946 to keep tabs on the hundreds of pressure groups at work in the National Capital. It requires any person who "shall engage himself for pay or for any other consideration" for the purpose of attempting to influence the passage or defeat of federal legislation to register with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate.

The 15-year total of registrations that has been filed under the law does not represent an accurate picture of the number of lobbyists and lobby organizations currently active in Washington, however. There are two reasons for this.

First, the Act does not require a lobbyist to withdraw his registration when he ceases to be actively engaged in pressuring Congress. Many of the persons who have registered under the Act have since moved into other fields or have died. Also, some of the organizations who have registered as lobby groups were set up to work for or against a specific piece of legislation and remained active only as long as their particular legislative interests were alive. A recent example of such a group was the Mutual Life Insurance Companies' Temporary Committee on Taxation which was organized in 1958 and was active during the nine months of 1959 while Congress was considering legislation revising the formula for taxing the income of insurance companies. Official reports indicated the group spent over $140,000 during the 1959 session of Congress and went out of existence after the legislation it had been backing was signed into law.

Another reason for some of the confusion regarding the actual number of lobbyists active in Washington at any given time is the fact that some lobbyists have registered two or more times; usually they file new registrations each time they are employed by a different organization. Former Sen. Scott W. Lucas (D Ill., 1939-51), for example, filed a lobby registration June 17, 1960, listing as his employer Group Hospitalization Inc. It was the 27th organization Lucas had represented and the 31st registration he had filed since moving from the Senate to the "Third House" of Congress.

The total of 5,751 registrations filed during the 15-year history of the Act actually represents only 4,080 different lobbyists and pressure groups. Of the 215 registrations filed during 1960, only 125 were from persons and groups who had never registered before.

Of the 4,080 unduplicated registrations, 3,414 were from individuals, 201 from law and public relations firms and 465 from organizations. The 125 new registrations in 1960 included 86 individuals, 11 law and public relations firms and 28 organizations.

Legislative Goals

The Lobby Act requires persons and groups filing registration forms with Congress to state on the forms their legislative interests. Although the law calls for detailed statements, most registrants respond with broad generalities. A labor union, for example, probably would give as its legislative interest: "legislation affecting union members;" a rail association might say: "legislation of interest to the rail industry;" a scientists' organization registering in 1960 said it was interested in "all legislation of interest to the scientific community."

In reporting on registered lobbyists and groups Congressional Quarterly has devised eight broad categories which reflect the registrants' general legislative interests: business, citizens, farm, foreign, individuals, labor, professional and veterans. Of the 215 registrations filed between Jan. 1-Sept 1, 1960, 128 fell into the business category; 24 into the citizens category; eight were interested in farm legislation; 11 fell into the foreign category; 12 represented individual interests;

Registration Totals

The Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act of 1946 requires the registration of all persons attempting to influence federal legislation. The year-by-year breakdown of all registrations (including duplications) since the law was enacted:

Year	Registrations	Year	Registrations
1946*	222	1954	413
1947	731	1955	383
1948	447	1956	347
1949	559	1957	392
1950	430	1958	337
1951	342	1959	393
1952	204	1960	215
1953	296	TOTAL	5,751

*Last four months only.
From Jan. 1 through Sept. 1.

20 were classified in the labor category; seven were considered professional; and five were interested in veterans' legislation.

Judging by the number of registrations, the busiest lobbyist during 1960 was a Washington attorney, James W. Riddell. Riddell registered as an agent for a group called the Entertainment Law Committee, for the State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co., the First National Bank of New York and for the American Industrial Bankers Assn. A Washington law firm, Chapman, Wolfsohn and Friedman, also registered for four different organizations during the first nine months of the year. Listed by the firm as employers were the Hawaiian Botanical Gardens Foundation, Camera Nacional de la Industria Pesquera of Mexico (the Mexican Government's Bureau of Fisheries), the West Marin, Calif. Property Owners Assn., and the Camera Minera de Mexico (the Mexican Bureau of Mines).

Among groups listed as employers by lobbyists registering during 1960, the names of two appeared more frequently than any other. The Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, with headquarters in Kansas City, Mo., enlisted the services of four widely scattered labor representatives, one each from Pittsburgh, Chicago, Cleveland and St. Augustine, Fla. Each listed his legislative interest as "legislation affecting railroad employees."

The only other group appearing on as many as four registration forms was the American Industrial Bankers Assn. of Washington. The banking group hired the services of each of the partners of the Washington law firm of Dawson, Griffin, Pickens and Riddell. Each of the attorneys listed his legislative interest as "legislation affecting the banking industry."

Principal Lobby Drives

The 1960 session of Congress was the battleground for much highly controversial legislation and pressure groups undoubtedly played an important part in the outcome of such issues as health care for the aged, minimum wage coverage, increased pay for federal employees, civil rights, U.S. adherence to the World Court, area redevelopment, federal aid to education and agricultural production controls. But a study of the lobby registrations that were filed during the time when the big Washington pressure groups were concentrating on these issues fails to indicate any unusual lobbying activity. Most of the persons and groups that did register during 1960 played little or no part in the big lobby campaigns of the year and, conversely, very few of the organizations which were most active were represented on the list of 1960 registrations. For example, the American Medical Assn., which spearheaded the drive against legislation to provide free health insurance to social security beneficiaries, increased its registered lobbyists by only two. The pair who registered as agents for the AMA identified themselves as Roy T. Lester, AMA's Washington office manager, and Paul R.M. Donelan, legislative attorney. Both said they were interested in "all bills (Senate and House) relating to health and welfare." Neither indicated clearly what his compensation would be or how much he intended to spend on lobbying -- questions that are asked of each registrant but answered by very few.

Among groups opposing the AMA's position on health insurance for the elderly were the AFL-CIO and various organizations composed of persons over 65, such as the Golden Ring Clubs in several states. The AFL-CIO for years has maintained a large number of registered lobbyists, many of whom worked on the health care bill. But no lobbyist has ever registered for the Golden Ring Clubs. The Aug. 24 issue of the Wall Street Journal reported that, while the Senate was considering health insurance legislation, two busloads of members of Golden Ring Clubs converged on Capitol Hill to try to persuade certain uncommitted Senators to vote for the social security plan. Presumably, all, or at least some, of these lobbyists should have registered with Congress but none did.

The influential postal lobby used a similar tactic -- rushing people into Washington as a show of strength for their position -- at the climax of their successful drive for a pay raise for federal and postal employees. The postal lobby consists of the Washington representatives of the 125,000-man National Assn. of Letter Carriers (AFL-CIO) and about a dozen other postal and federal employee unions. After Congress had passed and the President had vetoed the desired legislation, the NALC put into effect "operation override" under which postal workers from all over the country were brought to the Capital to line up the two-thirds vote in both Chambers necessary to override a Presidential veto. At the time the vote to override was taken, the galleries were jammed with uniformed letter carriers and clerks. The postal workers and about 1 million other federal employees got their pay raise, but not one new registration from the postal lobby was filed with Congress during 1960.

One interest group that lobbied hard during 1960 and did show up in the lobby registrations was the largely foreign-based sugar lobby. In an effort to get some of the American market that was left after the Cuban sugar quota was cut, organizations from Brazil, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and Peru hired Washington lobbyists to take their case to Congress. An agency of the Cuban government also registered, apparently to get some of its quota back.

Ex-Congressmen

Some of the most effective lobbying in Washington is performed by a small group of men who should know all about how to pass a bill -- men who themselves have served in Congress. Two new ex-Congressmen-lobbyists, former Rep. John V. Beamer (R Ind. 1951-59) and former Sen. Charles E. Potter (R Mich. 1951-59), registered in 1960, bringing to 79 the total number of those who had gone from passing laws to influencing them. Beamer registered as a representative of the Fine Hardwoods Assn., a Chicago organization; Potter registered as executive director of the Committee of American Tank Owners at a salary of $25,000 -- $2,500 more than he made as a Senator.

Other former Members of Congress who registered in 1960 but who also had registered in previous years were ex-Sen. Lucas, representing Group Hospitalization Inc.; ex-Rep. Fritz G. Lanham (D Texas 1919-47), who registered for Quality Brands Associates of America; and ex-Rep. Robert Hale (R Maine 1942-59), who said he would lobby for the Wisconsin Avenue Committee on Transportation Problems, a group of Washington (D.C.) citizens up in arms over the traffic problem in the Nation's Capital. (For more on Congressmen-turned-lobbyists, see 1959 Almanac p. 687)

Registrations by Lobbyists

According to official records, 393 persons and organizations filed lobby registrations during 1959, the first session of the 86th Congress. In 1960, during the second session of the 86th Congress, an additional 215 filed lobby registrations through Sept. 1, 1960, the date Congress adjourned.

Names of persons and organizations who filed lobby registrations during the first session of the 86th Congress -- Jan. 7-Sept. 15, 1959 -- are listed in the 1959 CQ Almanac, p. 690. Those who filed during the remainder of 1959, and those who filed during the 1960 session, up to adjournment on Sept. 1, are listed below.

A story describing the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act and detailing some of the more interesting aspects of the 1960 registrations appears in this volume, page 665.

CQ Fact Sheet On Committee Investigations

$15.5 MILLION AUTHORIZED FOR 1959-60 INVESTIGATIONS

The 86th Congress authorized its committees to spend almost $15.5 million on investigations, more than in any other Congress in the period 1951-60.

During this ten-year period, funding for Congressional investigations rose 171.2 percent from $5,700,870 in the 82nd Congress (1951-52) to $15,463,520 in the 86th Congress (1959-60), Congressional Quarterly studies show.

(For detailed background on investigation funds authorization methods and spending procedures and allocations see 1959 Almanac p. 716; for list of investigations on which funds were spent in the 86th Congress see p. 688)

Authorizations

Totals for the 86th Congress show Senate committees were authorized to spend $9,666,520 for investigations and House committees were allotted $5,797,000. Authorizations are made from the contingent funds of the two chambers. (For individual committee figures see next page.)

All standing committees of the Senate, as well as the Select Small Business Committee automatically receive $10,000 each Congress under section 134 (a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. Part of this money is used for investigations and the full sum is included in all totals here.

A few Senate committees retain, for all or part of a Congress, authorized but unspent funds of the preceding Congress. These have been excluded from CQ totals since 1957.

Of 37 committees (excluding Appropriations) in both the 85th and 86th Congress, 25 received higher authorizations for investigations, (a rise of $3,967,478), four were allotted the same amount and eight received less (a cut of $937,238) in the 86th compared with the 85th. The net increase authorized for all committees was $3,345,240.

Of the 39 standing, select and special committees of the 86th Congress listed on the CQ authorizations and expenditures chart, the Senate Judiciary Committee as usual received the highest authorization, a total of $3,192,500, over $1 million more than in the 85th Congress. The Committee's active Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee itself received $875,000 which was more than 35 full committees were allotted.

The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee received the second largest authorization, $1,161,020. The third largest authorization, and largest for the House, $1,040,000, went to the House Government Operations Committee.

Spending

Actual spending figures for House Committees were tabulated through June 30, 1960 and totaled $3,324,002.25. Biggest House spender was the Government Operations Committee with $701,670.38. Second highest was the Un-American Activities Committee which spent $439,790.46 and third was the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee with $419,600.40.

Senate spending figures totaled $3,559,434.07 through Jan. 31, 1960. The Senate Jan. 11 repealed a 1947 resolution requiring bi-annual reports of Senate committee expenditures in the Congressional Record. The Secretary of the Senate declined to release later figures to CQ. The Senate now releases its committee spending figures annually in the Senate Rules and Administration Committee report, "Senate Inquiries and Investigations," and in the Secretary of the Senate's annual report.

Fiscal Year Authorizations

The two Appropriations Committees and the joint committees receive their authorization on a fiscal year basis. These totals are omitted on the CQ chart.

In the fiscal 1961 Legislative Appropriation Act (PL 86-628) enacted July 12, 1960, the Senate Appropriations Committee was allotted $380,000, a cut of $20,000 from its fiscal 1960 authorization, and the House Appropriations Committee received $500,000, the same amount as in fiscal 1960.

The House Appropriations Committee reported spending $499,085 (or 99.8 percent of its $500,000 authorization) for investigations in fiscal 1960. $221,668 was spent Jan. 1 to June 30. The Senate Appropriations Committee reported spending $78,020.59 through Jan. 31.

Five joint committees whose primary work is investigative were authorized $556,860 by PL 86-628 and the Defense Production Act of 1950, as amended in 1955.

Money allotted to these committees:

Joint Committee	Fiscal 1961	Fiscal 1960
Defense Production	$ 65,000	$ 65,000
Economic	156,950	156,950
Immigration and Nationality Policy	20,000	20,000
Internal Revenue Taxation	300,000	295,000
Reduction of Non-Essential Federal Expenditures	24,910	24,795

The Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, which handles legislative as well as investigative work, was authorized $280,145 in fiscal 1961 by PL 86-628. It received $329,145 in fiscal 1960.

The Joint Committee on Washington Metropolitan Problems, which expired Sept. 30, was authorized $80,000 during the 86th Congress, compared with the $130,000 it was allotted for the 85th Congress. It reported spending $44,994 Jan. 31.

Spending reports of the Joint Economic Committee, available to Jan. 31, showed an outlay of $178,284.76. Other joint committees' spending figures were unavailable.

The House disbursing office handles funds for the Defense Production, Immigration and Nationality Policy and Internal Revenue Taxation Committees. The Senate disbursing office handles funds for the Atomic Energy, Economic, and Reduction of Non-Essential Federal Expenditures Committees, as well as for the defunct Washington Metropolitan Problems Committee.

Totals for Senate committees include funds authorized for probes by special resolution and the $10,000 fixed authorization for expenses, including probe expenses, granted each standing committee and the Small Business Committee under section 134 (a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. Some Senate committees also had available funds authorized but unspent by the preceding Congress or session of Congress; these funds are not included in authorization totals.

All money for House committees was set aside by special resolution.

Senate and House Appropriations Committees receive their funds on a fiscal-year basis; for their probe authorizations and spending, see preceding page.

Joint committee funds also are authorized on a fiscal-year basis; for their probe authorizations, see preceding page. Joint committees are not required to report their spending.

MAJOR INVESTIGATIONS UNDERTAKEN BY 86th CONGRESS

Following is a list of major investigations undertaken by Congressional committees from the beginning of the 86th Congress, Jan. 7, 1959 through Oct. 21, 1960. Some also were the subject of investigation by the 85th Congress. (1958 Almanac p. 664)

Each inquiry is listed by subject under the committee and subcommittee that conducted it. The list shows when hearings started and ended and gives report numbers where applicable.

Hearings on bills and resolutions are excluded. Only investigations in which committee hearings were held are listed. Staff studies that did not reach the hearing stage are omitted.

No investigations are listed for the Senate and House Appropriations Committees whose staffs conduct continuing studies on appropriations, operations of executive departments and disposition of Government funds.

Stories on major investigations appear in the 1959 Almanac p. 723-748 and this volume p. 699-752.

What's a Probe?

For purposes of this survey, Congressional Quarterly defined "investigation" as an inquiry by any Congressional committee or subcommittee that used investigative procedures (examining records, summoning and questioning witnesses) for one or more of the following reasons:

- Fact-finding for possible special and remedial legislation.
- Fulfillment of Congress' function as "watchdog" over operation of the Government and its programs.
- Informing the public.
- Resolving questions concerning membership or procedure, such as conduct of elections or fitness of Members of Congress.

Among committee activities not included in the definition: Inquiries conducted by committee staff members without participation by Members of Congress in formal hearings; routine hearings, and action on bills and resolutions.

CQ Fact Sheet On Open-Closed Hearings

CONGRESSIONAL SECRECY INCREASES IN 1960

Secrecy in Congress -- as measured by the percentage of committee meetings closed to the public -- increased sharply in 1960.

A check by Congressional Quarterly of information published daily in the Congressional Record while Congress is in session showed that Congressional committees closed the door on 35 percent of 2,424 meetings held during the 1960 session (Jan. 6-Sept. 1). The 1959 secrecy mark was 30 percent. (1959 Almanac p. 749)

The secrecy ratio was slightly higher in the Senate than in the House during the 1960 session. Of 921 meetings held by Senate committees, 328, or 36 percent, were conducted behind closed doors. In the House, 478 of 1,420 meetings were held in executive (closed) session, a ratio of 34 percent. Joint committees closed 34, or 41 percent, of 83 meetings.

Prior to 1960, the committee secrecy percentage had decreased steadily from the high of 41 percent in 1954 to the 30 percent mark recorded in 1959. A check made by Congressional Quarterly early in 1960 showed that the committees had maintained the 30 percent secrecy ratio during the first three months of 1960, but during the second half of the session when many of the committees were busy readying controversial legislation for floor debate, the ratio soared to 37 percent, bringing the overall score to 35 percent, the highest since 1956.

Following is a year-by-year breakdown of open and closed sessions since 1953, when Congressional Quarterly began its secrecy studies:

Year	Total Meetings	Number Closed	Percent Closed
1953	2,640	892	35%
1954	3,002	1,243	41
1955	2,940	1,055	36
1956	3,120	1,130	36
1957	3,251	1,103	34
1958	3,472	1,167	34
1959	3,152	940	30
1960	2,424	840	35

Individual Committees

Of the Committees that reported meeting 50 or more times during the 1960 session, House Ways and Means showed the highest secrecy percentage, 81 percent. The Committee, which has the responsibility of processing all tax measures introduced in Congress, spent much of its time working out a compromise bill providing health care for the aged. It also considered legislation extending certain excise taxes and providing an increase in the national debt limit and bills extending tax relief to companies making investments abroad and organizations engaged in lobbying. The Ways and Means Committee closed the doors to the press and public for 57 of 70 meetings during 1960.

Security precautions figured in the next two most secretive committees -- House Foreign Affairs and Senate Foreign Relations. The House group closed 64 of 90 meetings for a secrecy score of 71 percent; the Senate Committee locked the doors on 46 of 72 meetings for a score of 64 percent.

The Senate Finance Committee, which has the same function in the Senate as the Ways and Means Committee in the House, also scored high in the secrecy study although it met less than 50 times. Of 48 meetings reported by the Committee, 33, or 69 percent, were in closed session.

Each committee decides when it will bar the public from its sessions. Section 221 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 states: "The Joint Committee on Printing is authorized and directed to provide for printing in the Daily Record (the Daily Digest of the Congressional Record)...a list of Corgressional meetings and hearings, and the place of meeting and subject matter; and to cause a brief resume of Congressional activities for the previous day to be incorporated in the Record."

In practice the provision often is ignored. The House Appropriations Committee, probably the busiest of all Congressional committees, traditionally holds all of its meetings in private and reports none of them. Congressional Quarterly did not include the House Appropriations Committee in its tabulation of open and closed meetings because of the uncertainty of the number of times it met.

The 15 subcommittees which make up the full House Appropriations Committee go over money requests in private because Chairman Clarence Cannon (D Mo.) believes they get more work done this way and make better use of limited office space.

Cannon's view apparently is not shared by his Senate counterpart, Carl Hayden (D Ariz.), Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee. The Senate group reported 190 meetings in 1960. It also had one of the lowest secrecy scores, closing only 49, or 26 percent, of its sessions.

Ground Rules

The tabulations in the chart on the next page excluded: meetings when Congress was not in regular session; meetings outside Washington, D.C.; meetings of conference committees to reconcile conflicting Senate and House versions of bills; informal meetings without official status; meetings of the House Rules Committee to consider sending legislation to the floor, but Rules Committee meetings for other purposes were included; meetings of House Appropriations Committee.

Open meetings followed by closed meetings were counted twice -- once in each category. Joint meetings of two separate committees were counted twice -- once for each committee. Morning and afternoon sessions of the same committee were counted only once if the committee covered the same subject in both sessions. The figures are based on information appearing in the Daily Digests of the Congressional Record and that obtained from the committees.

SELECT LABOR COMMITTEE ISSUES FINAL REPORT

Before going out of existence March 31, 1960, the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field issued a four-part report on its 1958 and 1959 investigations. To complete the report, the Committee received a two-month extension of its previously scheduled Jan. 31 expiration date.

Much of the final report involved the International Brotherhood of Teamsters and its president, James R. Hoffa. Hoffa and the Teamsters figured in action in 1960 involving the court-appointed board of monitors set up to oversee Teamster cleanup activities. Hoffa Dec. 1 announced the Teamsters had 1,700,992 members, a gain of 23,031 since Dec. 1, 1959.

The Select Committee was established in 1957 with Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.) as chairman. It investigated labor-management malpractices throughout 1957, 1958 and 1959, and from time to time issued reports on its findings. (See 1957 Almanac p. 777; 1958 Almanac p. 674; 1959 Almanac p. 731)

Files Transferred

Though the Select Committee expired March 31, its files were transferred to the Senate Government Operations Permanent Investigations Subcommittee, also headed by McClellan. The Subcommittee was authorized to continue the Select Committee's work until Jan. 31, 1961.

The transfer was authorized April 11 by the Senate's voice vote adoption of an amended resolution (S Res 255) containing provisions carrying a $75,000 budget for labor investigation activities by the Permanent Investigations Subcommittee. The resolution stipulated that the authority granted the Subcommittee was not intended to impinge on the activities of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee, which reportedly was concerned over a possible duplication of functions.

The action was proposed by McClellan as an amendment to S Res 255, which authorized $85,000 for completion of a study on a world-wide health research by the Government Operations Reorganization and International Organizations Subcommittee. McClellan, chairman of the Government Operations Committee, its Investigation Subcommittee and the Select Committee, told the Senate conferences had been held with the majority and minority leaders and Chairman Lister Hill (D Ala.) of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee and all had agreed the amendment was "possibly the best way and the proper course" to conclude the Select Committee's work.

Before the resolution was adopted, there was considerable controversy over whether the transfer should be made and whether, as an alternative, the Select Committee should be continued in existence for another year.

The controversy stemmed in part from hostility of labor leaders to the Select Committee and to McClellan. In some union circles, it was contended that the Select Committee's work had taken on an anti-union character and had been responsible for passage of the 1959 Labor Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (PL 86-257), which labor opposed as "punitive". (1959 Almanac p. 156) Some labor leaders feared that transfer of the Select Committee's functions to the Permanent Investigations Subcommittee, or alternatively, continuation of the Select Committee, might place in McClellan's hands, instead of those of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee, responsibility for Congressional overseeing of the administration of the 1959 labor law.

As a result of this fear, when McClellan early in the session introduced a resolution (S Res 287) transferring the files of the Select Committee to the Permanent Investigations Subcommittee, there was opposition by labor circles, and the full Government Operations Committee March 24 rejected S Res 287, by a 4-5 vote. Sens. Henry M. Jackson (D Wash.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Ernest Gruening (D Alaska), Edmund S. Muskie (D Maine) and Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) were the five voting against S Res 287; McClellan, Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.), Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) and Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) voted for it.

On the same day, March 24, the Senate adopted a resolution (S Res 265) authorizing the Labor and Public Welfare Committee to employ 15 additional staff members through Jan. 31, 1961, for overseeing administration of the 1959 labor law.

McClellan subsequently pressed for action on a second resolution he had introduced, S Res 294, continuing the Select Committee for another year, and it was reported, 5-3, March 30 by the Senate Rules and Administration Committee. On the same day, AFL-CIO President George Meany sent telegrams to all Senators opposing S Res 294, and saying the Select Committee "has become more and more a sounding board for anti-union elements."

However, McClellan and Hill reached accord later on the grant of powers subsequently embodied in S Res 255 and adopted by the Senate April 11, and S Res 294 never reached the Senate floor.

Committee Report

The Select Committee filed its final report (S Rept 1139) in four parts, covering two years (1958-59) of hearings and investigations. Part I was filed Feb. 26; Part II, March 15; Part III, March 28; and Part IV March 31.

Part I -- Following were the "findings" contained in Part I:

● SECONDARY BOYCOTTS -- The report said that in seven cases studied by the Committee in November 1958 hearings, secondary boycotts were used "to coerce workers into joining unions which they did not wish to join." In all but one case, the report said, the "predominant offender" was the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. The boycotts, in some cases accompanied by violence, resulted in economic loss to employers and employees, the report said, and in none of the cases were they "used for legitimate union purposes." (For testimony, see 1958 Almanac, p. 686). The Committee cited as illustrations:

(1) Waldorf-Astoria Hotel-Terminal Barber Shops. The report described this as a 1956 dispute involving efforts to have barbers at the hotel, who had been represented by the Terminal Barbers Guild, pressured into joining the AFL-CIO Barbers Union. The report said that in order to get the hotel management to pressure Terminal to get its employees to sign up with the AFL-CIO

Barbers Union, the Teamsters picketed the hotel and thereby shut off deliveries of supplies to it, paralyzing operations. "The power of the Teamsters, and their capricious use of it, were never more clearly demonstrated," the Committee said.

(2) Nebraska Teamsters hot cargo cases. In one case, the Committee said, the Teamsters, seeking to sign a contract with Coffey's Transfer Co. in 1955 without securing the consent of the employees, instigated secondary boycotts which eventually forced the firm out of business, despite the fact that the firm ultimately won every legal proceeding it brought against the union in court and before the National Labor Relations Board.

(3) Texas Teamsters hot cargo cases. Occurring around 1955 and involving the Galveston Trucking Co. and others, these were similar to the Nebraska cases, the Committee said, but involved greater use of violence, including bombings and one alleged killing.

(4) Burt Manufacturing Co. case. This represented "12 years of harassment" through use of a secondary boycott by the Sheet Metal Workers International Assn. (AFL-CIO) in a dispute involving representation of Burt employees by another AFL-CIO affiliate, the United Steelworkers of America, the report said. The firm had a contract with the Steelworkers Union, the report said, but Sheet Metal Union members refused to install products made by Burt on the grounds the products were not made by members of the Sheet Metal Union. The Sheet Metal Union made no change in its boycott policy despite a cease and desist ruling from the AFL-CIO executive board, the report said.

The Committee said the hearings on these cases were in large part responsible for the inclusion of the secondary boycott and hot cargo provisions in the 1959 Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (1959 Almanac p. 156) and that it hoped these provisions would "correct the inequities" which had been found.

● SHEET METAL WORKERS -- The Committee found on the basis of hearings in December 1958 that sheet metal contractors in the Chicago area were "obliged to pay sums from $250 to $400" to officials of the Sheet Metal Workers International Assn. (AFL-CIO) for the "privilege of operating union shops." The report also said officials of the Sheet Metal Workers Union in the Chicago area "participated in the rigging of bids on city contracting projects." The Committee said that "conflicts" in testimony on an alleged payoff by officials of the Coleman Co. of Wichita, Kan., to Arthur Cronin, president of Local 73 and fourth international vice president of the Sheet Metal Workers Assn., were "so irreconcilable that they will permit no other conclusion than that willful perjury was committed." The Committee said it had forwarded a transcript of the testimony to the Department of Justice for possible prosecution.

● NEW YORK NEWSPAPER DELIVERIES -- The Committee said the extent of infiltration of "criminal and underworld elements" into newspaper and magazine distribution in the New York area was "shocking" to the Committee and "constitutes a potential threat to freedom of the press." It said various newspaper distributing firms, "it was apparent to the Committee," kept "slush funds used to bribe officials of the Newspaper and Mail Deliverers' Union of New York and vicinity."

Among its findings, the Committee said its hearings in March and May 1959 (1959 Almanac p. 740) had produced "irrefutable" evidence that the New York Times and the New York Mirror, in order to arrange for deliveries during a Teamster strike in September 1948, were required to pay a total of $45,750 "as tribute to corrupt labor representatives through two labor racketeer fixers." The two were identified as Harold Gross, who was on the payroll of the Neo-Gravure Printing Co., and Cornelius Noonan, head of Local 1730, International Longshoremen's Assn. The Committee also said it had "incontrovertible" evidence that the American Weekly, in order to avoid interruption of deliveries, was forced to pay Harold Gross $28,000 from 1952 through 1958, "undoubtedly for further distribution to corrupt union officials." The Committee said that Harold Gross was placed in charge of Teamsters Local 320 in Miami Beach, Fla., in 1958 and that the local was "subsidized" at the rate of $3,000 a month by the Teamsters international offices. The report said the subsidy was "personally authorized" by Teamster President James R. Hoffa.

The designation of Gross as head of "this racket local" and the $3,000 monthly subsidization more than a year after Hoffa made "cleanup" assurances to the Committee, "evidences not only Hoffa's complete dishonesty but also his contemptuous attitude toward the U.S. Senate and all law and order," the Committee said. It said "further proof of this" could be found in the establishment of the "so-called antiracketeering commission" in the Teamsters union, headed by ex-Sen. George H. Bender (R Ohio 1955-57). This commission, the Committee concluded, "was formed merely for purposes of deception -- to conceal from the Committee, the courts, and the public generally Hoffa's dependence on and obligato (racketeering) elements." (Hoffa Jan. 9, 1960 said that Bender had resigned from the Commission.)

The Committee noted that Gross and Noonan were indicted Sept. 24, 1959 on charges of conspiracy to extort $20,000 from the Hearst Publishing Co., and that Gross was convicted Dec. 11, 1959 of federal income tax evasion on cash payments he received through Neogravure Printing Co. It said his resignation from Local 320 was announced Dec. 17, 1959.

The Committee said these hearings helped convince it that "one of the greatest contributing factors to corruption in the labor-management field is the lack of moral courage and sense of public responsibility on the part of employers.... Until such time as management realizes its responsibilities and resists these pressures, there is little possibility of stamping out the racketeer influence in this field." The Committee expressed its appreciation of the "open and frank testimony" by officials of the New York Times and Neo-Gravure Printing Co.

● CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS -- The Committee said that on the basis of preliminary hearings Aug. 18, 1959, it believed political spending by both labor and management should be thoroughly investigated during a general election year, but that since the Committee would go out of existence shortly, this would have to be left to some future committee.

Part II -- Republican members of the Committee disagreed with the Democrats on evidence as well as conclusions in the material covered by Part II, which dealt with activities of the United Auto Workers (AFL-CIO). Democratic members were Sens. John L. McClellan (Ark.), chairman, John F. Kennedy (Mass.), Sam J. Ervin Jr. (N.C.) and Frank Church (Idaho). Republicans: Sens. Karl E. Mundt (S.D.), vice chairman, Barry Goldwater (Ariz.), Carl T. Curtis (Neb.) and Homer E. Capehart (Ind.). The various findings:

● KOHLER STRIKE -- Democrats said the UAW improperly maintained a mass picket line at the Kohler Plumbing Fixture Co. plant in Sheboygan, Wis., when the prolonged strike at Kohler began in 1954; that the union failed to take proper steps to halt picketing of non-strikers' homes; that property vandalism was "rampant"; that the UAW made "questionable" use of funds in paying court fees for the defense of William Vinson, a union member who was sent to the strike scene by a sister UAW local in Detroit, and who, together with John Gunaca, sent by the same local, committed "brutal" acts of violence; and that the UAW made "improper" efforts to initiate secondary boycotts against the Kohler Co. Kohler on the other hand, Democrats said, helped organize an independent union, resisted UAW efforts to organize, discouraged settlement of the strike issues and employed labor spies. They said the strike was a "classic example of labor-management relations at its worst." (1958 Almanac p. 681)

● PERFECT CIRCLE STRIKE -- Democrats said the lesson of the Committee's investigation of the 1955 strike against the Perfect Circle Corp., an Indiana piston ring manufacturer, was that "lawlessness begets lawlessness in an ever-widening vicious circle." (1958 Almanac p. 683)

● RICHARD T. GOSSER -- Democrats said allegations that Gosser, former international vice president of the UAW and president of Local 12, Toledo, Ohio, misappropriated union funds and might have known about or participated in "improper" receipt of fees by Peter Zvara, subordinate of Gosser, were "unsupported". Gosser was, however, involved in a "conflict-of-interest situation" prior to 1952, they said. (1959 Almanac p. 741)

GOP VIEWS

In separate views, the Republican members said that in the Kohler, Perfect Circle and Gosser investigations "the Committee failed properly to investigate pertinent allegations, failed to examine key witnesses, failed to affix responsibility, and failed to submit constructive corrective recommendations."

They said the chief counsel of the Committee "refused in more than one instance" to probe into areas which would have fixed responsibility for crime and violence "which has characterized and generally been associated with UAW strikes." This, they said, grew out of a "natural conflict of interest situation" whenever an investigation "touched upon the domain of Walter Reuther". The Republicans said testimony showed impairment of civil liberties, destruction of free collective bargaining and willful violation of law, and convinced them that "corruption, misappropriation of funds, bribery, extortion and collusion with the underworld has occurred within the UAW." "Violence and intimidation are essential parts of the Reuther formula for power," the GOP members said. They recommended establishment of a special committee "to review the entire labor law structure" and enactment of "effective federal legislation to outlaw the expenditure of union funds, manpower and facilities for political purposes."

In separate Democratic views, McClellan and Ervin said the "charge of failure to investigate these cases wholly lacks foundation and credibility." They said they "deeply regret" the "statements derogatory to Democratic members". The "partisan ring of such unwarranted derogatory statements is so revealing," they said, that it obviated the necessity to make any defense against them. They said the Committee's chief counsel, Robert F. Kennedy, showed "courage, integrity, and industry of the highest order". They added that the Gosser-Local 12 investigation was conducted independently by the Republican members, and information was "kept secret" from the Democratic members until the hearings were held.

Kennedy and Church said in separate views that the chief counsel and staff had made a "fearless investigation of labor-management corruption without regard to political considerations" and there was "no credible evidence of corruption, misappropriation of union funds, or collusion with the underworld" in the UAW.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Aug. 26 -- The National Labor Relations Board held that the Kohler Co., of Kohler, Wis., had refused to bargain in good faith in the six-year-old strike involving the company and Local 833, United Automobile Workers (AFL-CIO).

The strike began April 5, 1954, when negotiations broke down over a new contract in which the union asked for wage increases and a union-shop provision.

As evidence that Kohler had failed to bargain in good faith after the strike began, the NLRB cited findings that the company had offered wage increases twice to workers in the plant but not the strikers; had used detectives to trail individual strikers in taverns and the community (and parenthetically to investigate NLRB employees seeking facts about the strike); and had fired workers solely for striking. The board ordered Kohler to reinstate with full seniority 1,700 strikers who were fired before June 1, 1954.

The board found that the union had engaged in illegal mass picketing at the beginning of the strike, that some members had forcibly tried to prevent nonstrikers from entering the plant, and that the union had organized mass demonstrations in front of the homes of nonstrikers -- all unfair labor practices. Seventy-seven strikers involved in such practices were denied reinstatement by the board.

Part III -- The third part of the report covered the criminal syndicate, Teamsters Union President James R. Hoffa and Joseph P. Glimco, president of Teamsters Local 777, Chicago. Republican Committee members concurred in the findings but opposed a recommendation by Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) for a National Crime Commission. (See criminal syndicate findings)

The various findings:

● CRIMINAL SYNDICATE -- The Committee said the "gangland meeting" at Apalachin, N.Y., in 1957 was "symptomatic of the growing power of the American underworld." It said "such Apalachin figures as Vito Genovese, Mike Miranda, and Russel Bufalino paraded the underworld's contempt for the Government and its institutions in their silent testimony before the Committee." It recommended an immediate Congressional study "looking toward the most feasible method of coping with this menace."

Kennedy, in separate views, said hearings had demonstrated "beyond a doubt that local law enforcement officers...were incapable of dealing with this enemy," and proposed a National Crime Commission as a federal "intelligence gathering agency" for surveillance of top criminal leaders and dissemination of information to enforcement agencies. He called for a Senate study of the proposal. Other Democratic members -- Chairman John L. McClellan (Ark.), Sam J. Ervin Jr. (N.C.) and Frank Church (Idaho) -- concurred in the recommendation and also endorsed an additional proposal by McClellan that the Commission be given permanent status, power of subpena, authority to hold hearings and make recommendations to Congress and the Justice Department.

Republican Members -- Sens. Karl E. Mundt (S.D.), vice chairman, Barry Goldwater (Ariz.), Carl T. Curtis (Neb.) and Homer E. Capehart (Ind.) -- said such an agency would impede existing programs of the Justice Department and Federal Bureau of Investigation, be "a short step" from a national police force, and fall prey to "individuals motivated by revenge or other corrupt motives." They recommended that the Senate Government Operations Permanent Investigations Subcommittee be empowered to investigate criminal activities when such inquiries "might serve a legislative purpose".

● JAMES R. HOFFA -- The Committee said it had found in 1959 testimony "instance after instance of unconscionable betrayal of his own members" by Hoffa and that, "from this point on, the fate and future of James R. Hoffa rest with the Executive and Judicial Branches of the Government, the monitors, and inevitably with his own members." The report said Hoffa "does not now have, nor has he ever had, any intention of moving against his racketeer friends," and that the anti-racketeering commission he created in 1958 was "nothing more than an expensive window dressing." The report attributed Hoffa's rise to union power to "a remarkable ability to concentrate negotiating power and control over contracts into the hands of himself and a selected clique subservient to his will."

The report reviewed various Hoffa-union transactions and among its findings were: Benjamin Dranow was "the central figure and clearly the emissary of Hoffa" in various complex financial deals; Teamsters Local 805 in New York was dominated by Abe Gordon, intimate Hoffa associate, who "managed to extract more than $225,000 in 'commissions' and unverified expenses" from the local's welfare fund in about nine years; in the Los Angeles area, where the union generally had an excellent reputation, Hoffa aligned himself with the three particular officials shown through Committee hearings to be corrupt; Hoffa extended special deals to employers with whom he had special business or social ties, and cases in point were his relationship with Carney Matheson, chief negotiator for employers in the Central States Conference, and with Riss & Co. of North Kansas City, Mo., and Trans-American Freight Lines -- where he allowed the companies to pay drivers a flat added rate instead of premium wages, despite rank and file protests; Hoffa made substantially lower contract offers, without any express authority, to employer representatives with the obvious purpose of undermining the strength of union officials known to be opposed to him.

● JOSEPH P. GLIMCO -- The report said Glimco, president of the Teamsters' Taxicab Drivers, Maintenance & Garage Helpers, Local 777, Chicago, was "a common thug and criminal who gained control of this union by violence." It said he "ruthlessly stifled any opposition by the membership, while he ransacked the union treasury." The Committee also found that the local's officers, trustees and executive board members were "of similar ilk -- parasites of organized labor -- who worked hand in glove with Glimco in exploiting the hard-working members of Local 777."

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Nov. 28 -- A United States court of appeals reversed a lower court conviction of 20 men involved in an alleged Apalachin "crime convention" in 1957. The defendants, sentenced Jan. 13 to varying jail terms, had been convicted of conspiring to obstruct justice by agreeing not to disclose the purpose of the Apalachin meeting, which took place Nov. 14, 1957.

In a unanimous decision, the Court of Appeals said the Government had failed to present sufficient evidence to prove an agreement by the defendants to lie to New York State and federal investigators about the purpose of their meeting.

At the Apalachin meeting, there were about 60 persons. The 20 who were tried, and whose convictions were reversed Nov. 28, were: Russell A. Bufalino, Ignatius Cannone, Paul C. Castellano, Joseph F. Civello, Frank A. De Simone, Natale Evoia, Louis A. Larasso, Carmine Lombardizzi, Joseph Magliocco, Frank T. Majuri, Michele Miranda, Joseph C. Montana, John Ormento, James Osticco, Joseph Profaci, Anthony P. Riela, John T. Scalish, Angelo J. Sciandra, Simone Scozzari and Pasquale Turrigiano.

Part IV -- The fourth and final part of the report covered the coin-operated music amusement and cigarette vending machine industry and also summarized Committee investigations since 1957.

The Committee's findings:

● COIN MACHINES -- The Committee said the coin-machine industry was "inherently a legitimate business of increasing importance and desirability, both dollarwise and functionally," but "underworld infestation" threatened to permeate it at all levels and, in certain areas, "hoodlum control is an ugly reality."

The Committee said:

Present laws and/or their enforcement were inadequate to halt the spread of racketeering; local courts frequently were unaware of the need for effective punishment; in some instances the "vast amount of money" available to the "organized underworld" was an insulation against prosecution.

Management had knowingly used criminals to increase its sales and condoned resulting violence as a "liability of the business"; small businessmen who tried to resist racketeers received little help from local authorities.

Racketeers showed an increasing inclination to assume the role of labor leaders in the industry and no effort had been made to promote bona fide locals for employees. The report said this left "a jurisdictional vacuum that has been filled almost completely by the Teamsters, with a consequent subjugation of the employees and employers unable to keep from being swept into the Teamster maw."

The Teamsters Union had evidenced a "shocking disregard of the rackets being perpetrated by its locals" and Union President James R. Hoffa himself helped to furnish two such locals to the Detroit underworld; Hoffa had condoned the "publicized mala fides" of Detroit Local 985 and its president, William E. Bufalino.

In no area of inquiry had there been found evidence of benefits obtained by coin machine locals for employees, with the "fleeting exception" of Miami, Fla., Local 349.

Racketeers had "attained a great measure of success" in dominating the coin-machine field in urban centers of New York, New Jersey, Illinois, Louisiana, Ohio, Michigan, Florida and Indiana.

● STATISTICAL SUMMARY -- In an over-all summary of its inquiries, the Committee said it had held 270 days of hearings and heard 1,526 witnesses since 1957.

Criminal Actions

The Justice Department Oct. 1 reported that it had developed a total of 44 cases against persons, business organizations or unions whose activities were investigated by the Select Committee since its inception in 1957. Another case, developed after the report was issued, brought the total to 45 by Dec. 8, 1960. Through Dec. 8, the actions brought 12 convictions, 19 pending indictments, five acquittals and one case dismissed by the government; two additional convictions were reversed on appeal and six others, as of Dec. 8, were being appealed.

Those convicted were:

William Presser, president of both the Ohio Conference of Teamsters and Cleveland Local 555, convicted Feb. 2 for contempt of Congress and June 7 for obstructing justice by mutilating subpenaed records of the Conference. Presser was cited for contempt by the Committee in December 1958. (1959 Almanac p. 723)

Ernest M. High, editor of "Spotlight Publications" of New York City, convicted Feb. 26 for contempt of Congress. High was cited Aug. 18, 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 709)

Peter Licavoli of Detroit and Tucson, Ariz., presently imprisoned for income tax evasion, convicted of contempt of Congress March 30. He was cited Aug. 18, 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 709)

Maurice A. Hutcheson, president of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America (AFL-CIO), convicted April 11 for contempt of Congress on the basis of an Aug. 18, 1958 citation. (1958 Almanac p. 709; 1959 Almanac p. 734) Hutcheson and two other union officials, O. William Blaier and Frank M. Chapman, Oct. 28 were convicted of bribery and conspiracy in the sale of property to Indiana for highway rights-of-way. The transactions were the object of 1957 hearings by a Senate Public Works subcommittee. (1957 Almanac p. 793)

Teamsters Local 626B, Myer (Mike) Singer, its business agent, and members Hubert Brandt, Walter Klein and Lee Allen Taylor, convicted March 28 for anti-trust law violation by restraining trade in the rendered grease business in Los Angeles, Calif. Singer, called for questioning by the Committee during 1959 hearings, invoked the Fifth Amendment. (1959 Almanac p. 732)

Irving Bitz, officer and stockholder in Bronx County News Corp. and Bi-County News Corp., New York City, convicted Aug. 3, 1959, of extortion and violation of antitrust laws in the distribution of magazines and newspapers. He was a Committee witness May 5, 1959.

Robert "Barney" Baker, representative of the Central Conference of Teamsters, convicted April 7 of violating the Taft-Hartley Act by accepting a bribe to settle a jurisdictional dispute. He appeared before the Committee Aug. 20, 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 678)

Edward F. Weinheimer, former Teamster, convicted March 18 for perjury in denying receipt of pay-offs. He was a Committee witness Aug. 27, 1958.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS

A New Jersey federal grand jury Nov. 15 indicted on an extortion charge Anthony Provenzano, president of Teamster Local 560, Hoboken, N.J., who Sept. 7 was named an international vice-president of the union. Provenzano took the Fifth Amendment when he appeared before the Committee July 6, 1959. (1959 Almanac p. 737)

The Supreme Court Oct. 10 agreed to review the Feb. 18 federal district court dismissal of a 1959 indictment charging former Teamster President Dave Beck and five co-defendants with violation of the Taft-Hartley Act in an alleged loan or payment of $200,000 to Beck by trucking officials. (1959 Almanac p. 738)

Three persons went on trial Nov. 29 in federal district court in Washington, charged with conspiring to alter, conceal or destroy hotel telephone records of calls made by union officials allegedly to thwart the Select Committee's investigation of the Teamsters. On trial were Mrs. Sally T. Hucks, former chief telephone operator at a Washington, D.C., hotel; Moss Herman, a New York Teamster official, and Joseph M. Williamson, an Illinois attorney.

A federal grand jury in Orlando, Fla., Dec. 7 indicted Teamster President Hoffa on mail fraud charges involving alleged misuse of more than $500,000 in union funds in a land development project -- Sun Valley, Inc. -- in Florida. Also named in the indictment were Henry Lower, former head of Teamster Local 376, Detroit, and currently president of the Sun Valley firm, and Robert E. McCarthy Jr., former branch manager of a Detroit bank. The Teamsters' board of monitors in 1959 charged Hoffa with misuse of funds in the project when it sought a court order for Hoffa's dismissal from office. (1959 Almanac p. 737)

TEAMSTER MONITORS

The Teamsters Union and its court-appointed board of monitors, set up in January 1958 to supervise a union "house-cleaning", in 1960 continued their jurisdictional duel. By year's end the struggle still was in progress, with proposals and counter-proposals for changes in union by-laws unresolved. (For background, see 1959 Almanac p. 736)

Major developments during 1960:

March 24 -- Teamster President James R. Hoffa said he would nominate William E. Bufalino, president of Local 985, Detroit, to succeed Daniel B. Maher, the union's representative on the monitors' board, who indicated he planned to resign. Bufalino figured in 1959 Senate hearings on coin machine rackets. (1959 Almanac p. 739)

March 28 -- Maher submitted his resignation but its acceptance hinged on approval of a replacement.

March 30 -- Federal District Judge F. Dickinson Letts, who established the board of monitors, ordered Lawrence T. Smith removed "as of today" from the board, where he represented rank and file members. Letts' office said Smith was asked to resign March 29 but sent word he would not. He recently had been voting against monitors' chairman Martin F. O'Donoghue. Smith, in a March 30 statement, said O'Donoghue appeared to be "too much in a hurry to proceed effectively," and that he would appeal Letts' order. (Smith reportedly also was in disagreement with Godfrey P. Schmidt, his predecessor on the board, and attorney for rank and file members until March 26. The group, which in 1957 initiated the action to oust Hoffa, dropped Schmidt on that date on grounds he was too preoccupied with "getting Hoffa" and was ignoring other complaints.)

March 31 -- The Teamsters asked the federal court to order immediately a new union convention on grounds a clean-up had "advanced to a point which gives reasonable assurance of new elections in accord with membership rights."

April 1 -- Letts appointed Terence F. McShane, former special agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, to replace Smith as rank and file representative on the board of monitors. McShane, who resigned his FBI job March 31, supervised the agency's 1957 investigation of wiretapping charges against Hoffa.

Letts notified Hoffa he would not accept Maher's resignation and therefore could not consider the nomination of Bufalino.

April 4 -- Maher wrote Letts he was "unable and unwilling" to continue on the board for personal and health reasons, that the court decree establishing the board provided for resignation under such conditions, and therefore, "as of this date I shall no longer serve."

April 5 -- O'Donoghue filed a complaint with Letts that there was sufficient ground to remove Hoffa from office in his failure to discharge Frank Collins as secretary-treasurer of Detroit Local 299 after his 1959 conviction for perjury.

April 14 -- The U.S. court of appeals in Washington, D.C., upheld an October 1959 order by Letts which denied a motion to remove O'Donoghue. The action had been brought by John Cunningham of New York, a rank and file member who since had broken with that group.

April 15 -- Hoffa filed an affidavit charging Letts with "personal bias and prejudice," and alleging that Letts had told a Time magazine reporter he intended to oust Hoffa.

April 27 -- Letts disqualified himself at the scheduled opening of a civil trial of Hoffa, declaring although he had "no thought or intention of admitting the truth" of Hoffa's charge, he had no choice under law but to step aside once the charge had been made. The trial involved monitors' charges that Hoffa should be removed from office because of his alleged mishandling of union funds from Hoffa's home local in Detroit and their use in a Florida real estate project. (See "Criminal Actions" p. 703) The trial immediately was reassigned to Federal District Judge Joseph R. Jackson, who denied a motion by Hoffa's attorneys for a delay.

May 2 -- The U.S. court of appeals ordered a postponement of the trial pending rulings on other motions and appeals in the case.

May 12 -- Bufalino was sworn in as the union's representative on the board of monitors after Letts agreed to accept him as Maher's replacement. The board membership was changed further by a May 12 U.S. court of appeals ruling temporarily reinstating Lawrence T. Smith as rank and file representative, pending further arguments. The ruling left in doubt the status of McShane.

May 21 -- Bufalino filed a complaint with Letts charging O'Donoghue with refusal to give him keys to the monitors' offices and files or to call a meeting until a court decision on the third monitor.

May 24 -- Hoffa filed a brief with Letts asking that his pending move to oust O'Donoghue be transferred to another judge and charging that O'Donoghue was conspiring with Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), Kennedy's brother, Robert, and Schmidt to "seize and control" the union.

Hoffa also filed a $2.5 million libel and slander suit in federal court in Detroit against the National Broadcasting Co., television entertainer Jack Paar and Robert Kennedy, charging the defendants with conspiracy to "ridicule, degrade, defame and humiliate" him in statements on four Paar shows on which Kennedy was a guest in 1959-60. Kennedy was chief counsel of the McClellan Committee until he resigned in September 1959 to handle his brother's Presidential campaign.

May 25 -- Robert Kennedy issued a statement that "I welcome the opportunity" to establish in court instances of what he called "the corrupt, dishonest leadership of Mr. Hoffa," and said his only concern "is that the suit... is designed only for propaganda and is not intended to be tried."

The executive board of Teamsters Local 174, Seattle, ordered the ouster from the union of Frank W. Brewster, former Teamsters International vice president, and fined him $15,000 on charges of irregularities in the handling of $121,850 in union funds. Brewster figured in 1957 McClellan Committee hearings. (1957 Almanac p. 661)

June 2 -- A U.S. court of appeals in Washington, D.C., invalidated Letts' March 30 order removing Smith from the board of monitors, holding that Letts' procedure had been incorrect. The court also stayed a March 14 order by Letts giving O'Donoghue power to supervise alone the work of a law firm (Kirkland, Ellis, Hodson, Chaffetz and Masters) hired by the monitors to conduct legal work for the monitors board in Teamster cases. The effect of the court ruling was to require participation of the entire monitors board in supervision of most of the law firm's activities.

June 14 -- The court of appeals ruled that the Teamsters could not appeal a December 1959 court order authorizing the monitors to use subpenas and take depositions in investigating union affairs.

June 16 -- The court of appeals voted to allow union rank and file members to intervene in court proceedings.

July 15 -- O'Donoghue resigned as monitor chairman, a job he had held since May 1958, citing "urgent personal reasons" in a letter to Letts. He said he regretted the board had made "little or no progress" in "cleaning up corrupt influences within the Teamsters Union," and blamed lack of progress on "bad faith" and "delaying tactics" by union officials.

July 18 -- Schmidt filed a petition with Letts asking removal from the board of Bufalino, charging his appointment was part of a plot by Hoffa to stall the board's work. He also charged that Bufalino and Jacob Kossman, a Hoffa attorney, approached him in April and offered to accept any settlement of union affairs if Hoffa was retained as president.

July 19 -- Bufalino issued a statement denying Schmidt's charges.

July 21 -- The court of appeals in Washington, acting on a Hoffa appeal to halt the trial for his removal ruled that the hearing could be held but that the 1958 consent decree which brought the union under monitor supervision did not authorize removal of officers. The court said, "We believe that the time is ripe for all parties...to consult in an earnest effort to reach an agreed disposition of pending matters...."

Aug. 23 -- Letts appointed McShane to succeed O'Donoghue as chairman of the monitors.

Sept. 26 -- McShane was sworn in as monitors chairman, and said he would try to end the monitorship and restore full autonomy to the union in "a matter of months -- less than a year." He took office following the conclusion of oral arguments against his appointment by representatives of Hoffa before Letts. Hoffa said he believed "McShane without question is prejudiced," and would appeal the appointment.

Oct. 28 -- The appeals court upheld Hoffa's objections to McShane, ruling 2-1 that either side -- the Teamsters or the union dissidents -- could veto the appointment of a chairman on "reasonable grounds".

Nov. 2 -- Hoffa petitioned the appeals court to allow him to call a union convention in Chicago Jan. 16-20, 1961. The union's 1959 scheduled convention was canceled in December 1958 by Letts, who ruled that monitor approval must be secured before any new meeting could be held. (1958 Almanac p. 681)

Nov. 12 -- Hoffa asked the court for permission to withdraw his Nov. 2 petition pending the outcome of other legal negotiations, and the court Nov. 16 granted his request.

Anti-Monitors Bills

Three similar bills were introduced in 1960 to prohibit federal courts from regulating union affairs through the use of monitors or other supervisory employees.

None of the bills was reported in either chamber. Hearings were held May 18-19 by the House Judiciary Subcommittee No. 3 on HR 11845, introduced April 20 by Rep. Thomas J. Lane (D Mass.). The other proposals were HR 11960, introduced April 27 by Rep. John H. Dent (D Pa.), and S 3444, introduced April 28 by Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.). Other Congressmen, including a group of Democratic Representatives led by Rep. James Roosevelt (D Calif.), proposed an inquiry into the Teamster monitors' actions, and Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D Ill.) suggested that the Labor Department proceed under the 1959 Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act "to bring some degree of order out of utter chaos."

TESTIMONY -- May 18 -- AFL-CIO President George Meany, in a letter to the Subcommittee, opposed the legislation and said Congress "should, as a general rule, refrain from interfering with the judiciary's performance of its functions." Meany said the Teamsters Union, which accepted court appointment of a board of monitors to oversee reforms in the union, "are simply seeking to be relieved of the consequences of their own bargain," and "if federal courts were abusing their powers in this field by unwarrantably undertaking to supervise the administration of labor organizations, I would of course be the first to object."

Daniel B. Maher, a Teamster representative on the board of monitors from March 1959 until his April resignation, said the courts probably would keep the monitorship alive for another 10 years. He said he had offered to waive his legal fees of about $4,000 a month if the other monitors had agreed to serve without pay, but "there were no takers". Maher said if his suggestion had been accepted, "this monitorship would have wound up in three or four months without question." Maher said the monitor operation cost the Teamsters about $2,000 a day, "which I consider unconscionable."

Republican Subcommittee members William C. Cramer (Fla.) and John V. Lindsay (N.Y.) protested that Subcommittee Chairman Edwin E. Willis (D La.) should not have scheduled the hearings while the status of the monitors was being considered by the courts.

May 19 -- Rep. John H. Dent (D Pa.), who April 27 introduced a bill (HR 11960) identical to HR 11845, upheld the rights of rank and file union members to hold elections and said the Teamster monitor board infringed on union rights.

Testimony supporting the legislation came from representatives of labor organizations including the Teamsters, and some AFL-CIO affiliates, including the National Maritime Union, International Assn. of Machinists and Flight Engineers International Assn.

CONTEMPT CITATIONS

The House in 1960 cited 16 persons for contempt of Congress, the Senate none. All 16 of the House citations were voted on Aug. 23.

Three of the 16 persons cited were officers of the Port of New York Authority. They were S. Sloan Colt, Austin J. Tobin and Joseph G. Carty. During a June 29 hearing held by the House Judiciary Antritrust Subcommittee, investigating the Authority, the three men, under orders, they said, from New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R) and New Jersey Gov. Robert B. Meyner (D), refused to turn over certain records to the Subcommittee.

The resolution (H Res 607) citing Colt for contempt was adopted Aug. 23 by a 270-124 roll-call vote of the House; that citing Tobin (H Res 606) by a 190-60 standing vote; and that citing Carty (H Res 608) by voice vote. (For roll-call vote, see chart p. 466; for separate story on Port Authority investigation, see p. 707)

The other 13 persons cited Aug. 23 were witnesses who, at House Un-American Activities hearings Nov. 17-18, 1959 in Puerto Rico, refused to answer questions about alleged Communist activities. The 13 argued that the Committee lacked jurisdiction in Puerto Rico because House Rule 11, stating the powers and duties of the Committee, said the Committee was authorized to sit and act only at any place "within the United States."

Twelve of the 13 were cited by voice vote of the House. They were:

Jose Enamorado Cuesta (H Res 609 -- H Rept 2122); Manuel Arroyo Zeppenfeldt (H Res 610 -- H Rept 2123); Juan Saez Corales (H Res 612 -- H Rept 2125); John Peter Hawes (H Res 613 -- H Rept 2126); Gertrudis Melendez Perez (H Res 614 -- H Rept 2127); Ramos Diaz Cruz (H Res 615 -- H Rept 2128); Frank Ruiz (H Res 616 -- H Rept 2129); Juan Emmanuelli Morales (H Res 617 -- H Rept 2130); Cesar Andreu Iglesias (H Res 618 -- H Rept 2131); Pablo M. Garcia Rodriguez (H Res 619 -- H Rept 2132); Cristino Perez Mendez (H Res 620 -- H Rept 2133); and Juan Santos Rivera (H Res 621 -- H Rept 2134).

Cited for contempt by a 385-0 roll-call vote was Consuelo Burgos De Saez Pagan (H Res 611 -- H Rept 2124). (For voting, see chart p. 466)

COURT CASES

Major 1960 court action on contempt of Congress:

Supreme Court -- The Supreme Court Nov. 14, in rulings on one contempt case and another involving an important state issue:

- Dismissed, by a 5-4 vote, a new appeal by Dr. Willard Uphaus (Uphaus v Wyman) who had been sentenced to a year in jail for refusing to give the Attorney General of New Hampshire the names of allegedly subversive guests at his summer camp. (1959 Almanc p. 205)
- Affirmed, by a 5-4 vote, the 1952 contempt of Congress conviction of Arthur M. McPhaul (McPhaul v U.S.) for his refusal to produce records of the Civil Rights Congress. McPhaul had contended that the Government must prove that the records existed and that he had them. McPhaul when appearing before the House Un-American Activities Committee did not produce the records as demanded by the subpena and declined to explain his action on the grounds of self-incrimination. (1952 Almanac p. 248)

Appeals Courts -- The U.S. court of appeals in Washington, D.C. June 18 affirmed the convictions of six men for contempt and struck down the convictions of two women.

In reversing the convictions of Mrs. Mary Knowles, a Pennsylvania librarian, and Mrs. Goldie Watson, a Philadelphia school teacher, the court said neither the Congressional committees involved nor their counsels had made any attempt to explain to the two women the basis of the questions or their pertinency to the inquiry as required by Supreme Court decisions.

Mrs. Knowles Jan. 25, 1957 was sentenced to four months in jail and $500 fine for contempt for refusing, on July 29 and Sept. 15, 1955, to tell the Senate Judiciary Internal Security Subcommittee whether or not she was a member of the Communist party. (1955 Almanac p. 530; 1956 Almanac p. 588)

Mrs. Watson Feb 16, 1954 refused to tell the House Un-American Activities Committee whether or not she was a member of the Communist party and on May11, 1954 the House cited her for contempt. (1954 Almanac p. 371, 373) A federal district court convicted her and on Nov. 29, 1956 sentenced her to a three-month suspended jail term and fined her $1,000.

In upholding the six other convictions, the court relied primarily on a June 8, 1959 Supreme Court ruling affirming the contempt conviction of Lloyd Barenblatt. In that case, the Court ruled that an authorized Congressional Committee had the right to investigate Communist activities. (1959 Almanac p. 723) In each of the six cases, the defendants had appeared before either the Senate Judiciary Internal Security Subcommittee or the House Un-American Committee and had pleaded 1st Amendment guarantees of freedom of speech and belief, rather than relying on the 5th Amendment, when questioned about possible Communist activities. The six cases involved:

- Robert Shelton, who appeared before the Senate Subcommittee Dec. 7, 1955 and Jan. 6, 1956; was cited for contempt of Congress May 10, 1956 (1956 Almanac p. 589); was convicted, and on Jan. 25, 1957 sentenced to six months in jail and a $500 fine.
- William A. Price, who Jan. 5, 1956 refused to answer questions of the Senate Subcommittee; was cited for contempt May 10, 1956 (1956 Almanac p. 589); was convicted, and on April 16, 1957 sentenced to three months in jail and a $500 fine.
- Herman Liveright, who on March 29, 1956 was cited for contempt for refusing March 19, 1956 to answer questions by the Senate Subcommittee (1956 Almanac p. 589); was convicted, and on March 22, 1957 sentenced to three months in jail and a $500 fine.
- John T. Gojack, who on Feb. 28, 1955 refused to answer questions by the House Committee (1955 Almanac p. 539); was cited for contempt July 26, 1955 (1955 Almanac p. 395); was convicted May 3, 1956 and sentenced to nine months in jail and a $200 fine. (1956 Almanac p. 590)
- Norton Anthony Russell, who appeared before the House Committee in 1954; was cited for contempt Nov. 19, 1954; was convicted May 31, 1956 and sentenced to 30 days in jail and a $500 fine. (1956 Almanac p. 590)
- Bernhard Deutch, who was cited for contempt May 11, 1954 for refusing to answer questions put to him by the House Committee earlier that year (1954 Almanac p. 365); was convicted and Dec. 13, 1956 sentenced to three months in jail and a $100 fine.

Another conviction, that of William Presser (see below), was upheld Oct. 27 by the appeals court.

District Courts -- Between Dec. 9, 1959 and Dec. 9, 1960, 10 persons were convicted of contempt of Congress for the first time in federal district courts, or pleaded nolo contendere. The case against one person was dismissed.

The case dismissed was the contempt charge against Sidney H. Ingerman, cited July 31, 1958 for refusing to tell the House Un-American Activities Committee on Oct. 1-2, 1957, about former Communist associates. Ingerman's case was dismissed Dec. 15, 1959. (1958 Almanac p. 709)

The 10 persons convicted or pleading nolo contendere, in order of dates of conviction, were:

Dec. 9, 1959 -- Paul Rosenkrantz pleaded nolo contendere ("I do not contest the charge") to a contempt charge arising out of his citation by the House July 31, 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 709)

Dec. 10, 1959 -- Donald Wheeldin was convicted of contempt arising from his refusal to testify before the House Un-American Activities Committee Sept. 2, 1959 in Los Angeles. (1959 Almanac p. 723)

Dec. 15, 1959 -- Sidney Turoff, cited at the same time as Ingerman (see above), was convicted of contempt.

Feb. 2, 1960 -- William Presser, president of the Ohio Conference of Teamsters and Cleveland Teamster Local 555, was convicted of contempt for refusing to produce records under subpena or answer questions on them in September 1958 testimony before the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field. (1959 Almanac p. 723)

Feb. 26 -- Ernest M. High, editor of "Spotlight Publications" of New York City, was convicted of contempt based on a citation voted by the Senate Aug. 18, 1958 on recommendation of the Select Committee. (1958 Almanac p. 709)

March 11 -- Edward Yellin, University of Illinois graduate student, was convicted of contempt of Congress for refusal to answer questions on alleged Communist activities during 1958 testimony before the House Un-American Activities Committee. (1958 Almanac p. 709)

March 16 -- Frank Grumman, radio operator for RCA Communications Inc., and a member of the American Communications Assn., was convicted of contempt of Congress for refusal to answer questions on alleged Communist activity in 1957 testimony before the House Un-American Activities Committee. (1958 Almanac p. 710)

In Gruman's case and in that of Bernard Silber (see below) U.S. District Judge F. Dickinson Letts Feb. 1 had dismissed some counts in the contempt indictments on the ground that the word "communist" was too vague. Letts upheld counts based on use of the words "Communist party" in the questioning of the two men.

March 23 -- Bernard Silber, member of the American Communications Assn., was convicted of contempt of Congress for refusal to answer questions on alleged Communist party activity in 1958 testimony before the House Un-American Activities Committee. (1958 Almanac p. 710)

March 30 -- Peter Licavoli of Detroit, already serving a prison sentence for income tax evasion, was convicted of contempt of Congress for failure to respond to a 1958 subpena from the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field. (1959 Almanac p. 734)

April 11 -- Maurice A. Hutcheson, president of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America (AFL-CIO), was convicted of contempt for refusal to answer questions in 1958 testimony before the Select Committee. (1959 Almanac p. 734)

PORT AUTHORITY

A House Judiciary Antitrust Subcommittee investigation of the Port of New York Authority led the House in 1960 to cite three officers of the Authority for contempt of Congress.

The three were S. Sloan Colt, chairman of the Authority; Austin J. Tobin, executive director; and Joseph G. Carty, secretary. All three were cited for "contumacious conduct" for refusing to turn over to the Subcommittee records it subpenaed in June.

On Dec. 6 Tobin, against whom the Justice Department had started proceedings in federal court, pleaded innocent. The stage was set for a trial, to begin Jan. 9, 1961, to test the Authority's assertion that only the states of New Jersey and New York, which had set up the Authority by bi-state compact, had authority over it.

The Antitrust Subcommittee, meanwhile, following the contempt citations, held hearings Nov. 28-Dec. 2 in New York on the Authority's activities.

Background

The Port of New York Authority was established by compacts in 1921 and 1922 (both compacts were approved by Congress) between the states of New York and New Jersey. The Authority was to be a joint agency for reconciling and promoting the interests of the two states in the harbor area that lies between them. As the scope of its activities expanded, its legal status continued to be ill-defined.

Termed a "public corporation" by the late Supreme Court Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, the Authority was held to be a "direct state agency" by the Supreme Court of New Jersey, but specifically denied such a status in an opinion by the New York State Attorney General. The Authority operates and collects revenues from four bridges, two tunnels under the Hudson River, four airports, Port Newark, a railroad freight terminal a bus terminal, two truck terminals, a helicopter terminal and a grain terminal -- all in the Northern New Jersey-New York City Metropolitan area. It owns some properties outright, leases others, simply manages still others.

House Action

In December 1959 the Port Authority announced it was studying the Great Swamp, Morris County, N.J., as the possible site of a commercial jet airport it intended to build. A dispute subsequently arose over the site, with many New Jerseyites favoring Burlington County. At the request of the New Jersey delegation to Congress, Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) of the House Judiciary Committee May 17, 1960 introduced a resolution authorizing the Committee to investigate the Authority (H Res 530).

The House adopted H Res 530 June 1. Celler, as Judiciary chairman, assigned the investigation to Subcommittee No. 5 (the Antitrust Subcommittee), headed by himself.

In a June 7 letter to the Authority, Celler said an investigation was necessary "to ascertain whether or not (the Authority) has exceeded the scope of its activities, as contemplated by Congress in approving the interstate compacts of 1921 and 1922, and the extent to which the Authority is carrying out its duties under these interstate compacts."

Tobin replied June 12 that the administration of the compact, as approved by Congress, "has been left exclusively to the states whose region was involved (New York and New Jersey)." He refused to furnish the documents requested by Celler.

The Antitrust Subcommittee June 15 issued subpenas to Tobin, Colt and Carty for all of the Authority's records and files since 1921.

Colt, Tobin and Carty appeared before the Subcommittee June 29 and produced Authority bylaws, organization manuals, rules and regulations, annual financial reports and minutes of the meetings of the Board of Commissioners and its committee. But they refused to hand over internal financing reports, management and financial reports prepared by outside consultants, or correspondence and memoranda involving negotiation, execution and performance of construction contracts, insurance contracts and policies, public relations contracts and policies, real estate operations, revenue bonds and rail transport policy of the Authority. They were acting, they said, under instructions from New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R) and New Jersey Gov. Robert B. Meyner (D). The Subcommittee and the full Committee promptly reported the contempt resolutions to the House (H Rept 2120-2122) and recommended that the three officials be held in contempt of Congress.

Only two Judiciary Committee members dissented from the recommendation. Reps. John V. Lindsay (R) and John H. Ray (R), both from New York City districts, in minority reports said that Congress had no constitutional right to intervene in the internal affairs of the bi-state agency. Both said that Congress did not create the Authority but had merely consented to the compact between the two states. The powers exercised by the Authority, they said, were delegated to it by the legislatures of New York and New Jersey.

In an effort to settle the dispute, Celler proposed to meet with Rockefeller and Meyner before the three contempt resolutions were taken up by the House. He invited the two Governors to meet with him Aug. 8. Rockefeller July 18 replied that he could not attend such a meeting until after Aug. 29. Meyner Aug. 2 declined the invitation, saying that he and Rockefeller should appear together before the full Judiciary Committee, rather than confer only with Celler. Celler said a meeting after Aug. 29 would be too late for the Committee to reconsider its recommendation.

Meyner Aug. 2 sent letters to the 48 other Governors and to all Members of the House, stating that the investigation by the Judiciary Committee constituted an "intrusion of federal authority into the internal affairs of our states." Celler countered Aug. 6 by sending messages to each of the 48 Governors contacted by Meyner. The states' rights issue that had been raised by Meyner in the Port Authority case, Celler said, was "a shibboleth raised by anyone who has a weak argument." He said that when Congress approved the bi-state compact in 1921, it had reserved to itself the right "to alter, amend or repeal" it.

Rockefeller and a trio of his predecessors as Governor of New York Aug. 22 sent identical telegrams to all House Members protesting the contempt proceedings. The message, which was signed by Rockefeller and former Govs. W. Averell Harriman (D 1955-59), Thomas E. Dewey (R 1943-47) and Herbert H. Lehman (D 1933-42), reiterated the states' rights theme and said "such precipitate and unhappy action would mark the first time in history that the Congress ever voted to instigate criminal prosecution for contempt against state officers serving a state agency in a matter that concerns the proper exercise of their official state duties."

The message also said Rockefeller and Meyner -- "as well as many former Governors" -- had been refused the opportunity to appear before the Judiciary Committee before the contempt citations were reported.

Celler issued a reply the same day saying the two Governors were given "multiple opportunities" to appear before the Committee and accusing them of "playing fast and loose with the Congress."

CITATIONS VOTED

The House Aug. 23 adopted the resolutions citing Colt, Tobin and Carty for contempt of Congress. The resolution citing Colt (H Res 607) was adopted by a 270-124 roll-call vote; that citing Tobin (H Res 606) by a 190-60 standing vote; and that citing Carty (H Res 608) by voice vote. (For roll-call vote, see chart p. 466)

The citations were turned over to the Justice Department for handling "in the manner and form provided by law." Convictions in federal court could bring fines of $1,000 and prison terms of one year.

Floor debate concentrated largely on whether Congress, which had consented to but not created the interstate compacts establishing the Authority, could investigate activities performed under the compacts. Celler said Congress could, and that involved in the dispute were "the dignity of the House of Representatives and the integrity of its process." Lindsay said the House was acting "hastily, unreasonably and unwisely."

A second issue in the debate was whether Rockefeller and Meyner had received a fair chance to discuss the matter with Celler before the Judiciary Committee recommended the contempt citations. The Governors' supporters said cancellation of hearings early in the year and Celler's refusal to wait until Aug. 29 to hear the state executives were evidence that Meyner and Rockefeller had not been given fair treatment.

Celler replied that the Governors were trying to hold up contempt proceedings until after adjournment.

A sidelight to the debate was the fact that liberal Governors of Northern states found themselves invoking the doctrine of states' rights, normally a Southern position. Rep. William M. Colmer (D Miss.) said he found himself "in the position of the man watching a fight between his wife and a bear. I do not much care which way it goes; I am just glad to see the fight. I am happy that so many are in favor of states' rights in the great states of New York and New Jersey."

Attorney General William P. Rogers Nov. 25 announced the Justice Department had filed an "information" against Tobin in federal district court, Washington, D.C. Rogers said the case would test the "respective contentions of the Congress and the Port Authority as to the extent to which Congress could inquire into the Port Authority's operations." (Under the information procedure, a judge alone determines if a trial is necessary.)

The Justice Department said Tobin alone was charged because it had been conceded that if the judge ruled adversely to him, he was empowered to and would produce the documents sought by the Subcommittee.

Tobin Dec. 6 pleaded innocent and Judge David A. Pine set Jan. 9, 1961 as the date for opening of the trial.

Celler, however, criticized the Justice Department's method of proceeding, charging the Department had flouted "the will of Congress by selecting only one individual for criminal prosecution for contempt of Congress.... Furthermore", he said, "instead of proceeding by way of grand jury leading to indictment as is required by statute, the Department of Justice now proceeds by way of information for which procedure there may be absolutely no statutory authority."

Subcommittee Hearings

The Antitrust Subcommittee subsequently held hearings on the Authority Nov. 28-Dec. 2 in New York. Celler said the hearings would resume in 1961.

TESTIMONY -- Nov. 28 -- Eugene A. Mintkeski, Authority treasurer, said the Authority in 1956 borrowed $50 million in a short-term loan from the First National City Bank of New York at an interest rate of 1.875 percent. The interest being paid to the bank was tax-exempt under state and federal laws because the Authority was a public agency. Subcommittee Counsel Herbert W. Maletz said the 1.875 percent tax-exempt return to the bank was equivalent, in net yield to the bank, to a 3.9 percent return in taxable interest. Maletz said at that time the "prime rate" (the rate charged to borrowers specially favored because of their good standing and large business) being charged private borrowers was 3.5 percent, taxable. Maletz said this meant the Authority, which should have been entitled to the equivalent of the prime rate, was actually paying the equivalent of more than the prime rate. Maletz also said a memorandum by D.K. Pfeffer, a First National vice president, said that the 2.25 percent (non-taxable) being paid by the Authority in 1957 was equivalent to 4.68 percent in taxable interest and was "comfortably above" the equivalent of the prime rate.

Mintkeski said he could not obtain lower rates than he had in 1956, and it was only in 1958, when Tobin threatened First National he would "go into the open market" for money that First National reduced its charges to 1.9 percent, then equal to the prime rate on loans on which interest was taxable. Mintkeski also said it was advantageous to borrow from First National because other banks required 20 percent of a loan to be kept on deposit.

(Tobin later the same day, after the hearings, said the Port Authority had paid no more than it had to in 1956-57 for money, and the U.S. Public Housing Authority was paying higher interest rates on its bonds then.)

Celler said the Authority had kept $100,000 in the Bankers Trust Co. and its predecessor bank without receiving interest since the late 1920s, which represented a "gratuity" in interest not paid of $150,000. Mintkeski said a similar no-interest deposit was kept in the Chase-Manhattan Bank.

Nov. 29 -- Harry Kraft, a Newark real estate broker and president of Allied Realty Corp., said his firm in 1956-57 paid $9,575.38 to Emanuel S. Breslow, manager of the commercial rentals division of the Authority's marine terminals division, in the belief that the payments would help him get leases on Authority property for his clients.

Breslow invoked the 5th Amendment when questioned on the alleged payments but said "No" when asked if he had been paid by anyone else.

Tobin said Breslow had been dismissed from his job Nov. 26. He also said the public interest was protected by the fact that the New York and New Jersey Governors had the right to veto Authority decisions. Rep. William M. McCulloch (R Ohio) said only seven such vetoes had been cast since 1921.

Nov. 30 -- Myron Rand, federal auditor, said the J.S. Frelinghuysen Corp., the Authority's exclusive broker for most insurance since 1946, had listed expenses of $4,148 in entertainment and gifts in 1959-60 to James W. Doyle, Authority director of finance, and John P. Olsen, its insurance manager. Doyle and Olsen denied receiving all but a few of the gifts, and Mortimer Wolf, counsel for Frelinghuysen, said many of the reported items were "bad errors." Tobin said the charges were a "filthy smear" and he had complete confidence in the two. Tobin also said most large firms used only one insurance broker and the Authority's insurance costs were the lowest possible.

Dec. 1 -- Tobin said that until 1946, when it was decided to have one broker handle all insurance, the Authority as a "patronage" device had deliberately split its insurance business among 11 firms. He said he considered this unbusinesslike, and decided to change the system, but that Knickerbocker Associates, headed by D. Mallory Stephens, New York State Assembly Ways and Means Committee chairman from 1942-52, had been continued as broker of record for a $975,900 policy because Stephens said loss of the contract by his firm would be "terribly, terribly unfair." Tobin said it was a coincidence that the contract was discontinued with Knickerbocker after Stephens left the state assembly. Subcommittee Counsel Maletz said three bills proposing investigations of the Authority were killed in Stephens' committee while he headed it.

Joseph S. Frelinghuysen Jr. said that from 1949-52 his firm actually handled the insurance for which Knickerbocker was paid and was broker of account.

Dec. 2 -- Tobin said that when a construction contract required "special considerations of time and quality," the Authority used a select list of contractors. Tobin made the statement after Authority Chief Engineer John M. Kyle said the reason a December 1958 Idlewild Airport hangar contract had been denied Joseph P. Blitz, a contractor who was low bidder, was that some of Blitz's references on performance were bad.

Celler criticized the Authority for not purchasing any new railroad cars with $20 million voted by New York State 15 months earlier, and Tobin said "tremendous progress" had been made in "tortuous negotiations" for the cars.

A Subcommittee staff study said the Authority's policy of pooling revenues from all its operations meant no toll cuts on any single project, even if it had paid itself off. The study said the Authority's assets exceeded its debts by $499,200,000 at the end of 1959.

Following Frelinghuysen's statement, Tobin said "This investigation is made up of slurs, smears and vengeance, because Mr. Celler could not get from the Port Authority favored treatment for clients of his law firm." Howard S. Cullman, honorary chairman of the Authority, agreed and said Celler pressured him in 1950 to get a parking lot concession for a client. He said Celler threatened to investigate the Authority. Celler said the charge was "an outrageous deliberate falsehood" and the Subcommittee would not be "intimidated by such attacks." He said that in 1952 he had investigated the Authority after a New Jersey Congressman introduced a bill to dissolve it, and that after the investigation he had opposed the bill and praised the Authority.

EXPORT EXPANSION

Partly to reduce the unfavorable U.S. balance of payments and check the outflow of gold from the U.S., and partly to revitalize the nation's export industry generally, President Eisenhower early in 1960 inaugurated an export expansion program.

The program was designed to be implemented largely under existing legislation, but Mr. Eisenhower asked Congress for $4,158,800 in special appropriations to expand export trade promotion. Of the request, $1,062,500 was eventually granted by Congress in the Second Supplemental Appropriations bill for fiscal 1961 (HR 13161 -- PL 86-722).

In related developments, the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee held hearings on the U.S. position in foreign trade and subsequently reported a bill (S 3102), authorizing $5 million for promotion of tourism to the U.S., which was passed by the Senate but died in the House; and President Eisenhower Nov. 16 took executive action to reduce foreign spending by all U.S. agencies in order to halt the flow of gold from the U.S.

Export Expansion Program

President Eisenhower March 17 sent a special message to Congress outlining a program to stimulate U.S. exports. The President said sale of more U.S. goods overseas would help to sustain U.S. capacity to maintain overseas expenditures for investment, private travel, maintenance of U.S. military forces and foreign aid. An export increase, the President said, could also "add substantially to the millions of jobs already generated for our people by export trade." (For text of message, see p. 638)

The President said that while most of the program could be effectuated under existing legislative authority, "the cooperation and support of Congress are vital to the success of this program."

Key features of the program:

Continued efforts to end discriminatory trade barriers against U.S. goods overseas, through negotiations among nations participating in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and with the assistance of the International Monetary Fund.

Export-Import Bank guarantee of non-commercial risks for short-term export credits and improvement of Export-Import Bank credit facilities for medium-term export transactions. (The Export-Import Bank March 17 announced that for sales where credit did not exceed six months, it would guarantee U.S. exporters against losses arising from such political risks as currency restrictions, confiscation of property or funds, war and civil uprisings.)

Efforts to strengthen trade promotion by the Commerce Department, expand and give higher priority to commercial activities of the Foreign Service, expand the Agriculture Department's trade promotion activities, put more emphasis on Government reports helpful to exporters, emphasize tourist travel to the U.S., and make better use of international fairs and trade missions.

ACTION ON FUNDS

The President subsequently sent to Congress on May 26 a request (H Doc 400) for $4,158,00 special appropriations and an additional $170,000 authority to spend from tariff receipts to implement the export expansion program. The Administration requested that the money be appropriated in the First Supplemental Appropriations bill (HR 12740) for fiscal 1961, but none of it was provided in that bill. The Administration then asked that the funds be included in the Second Supplemental (HR 13161), and the latter bill and enacted into law carried $1,062,500 for the export programs. Following is a breakdown of the President's request by function and the amount appropriated for each function in HR 13161:

- For the President's Special International Program, Mr. Eisenhower requested a supplemental appropriation of $986,800 to "make fuller use of international trade fairs and trade missions to expand American export trade." Appropriated by Congress: Nothing.

- For the Foreign Agricultural Service of the Agriculture Department, the President asked an appropriation of $330,000 for personnel to work on agricultural market development and trade promotion activities at home and abroad. He also asked that $170,000 of Section 32 funds -- funds received from tariffs on imports and available under existing law for promotion of agriculture and trade in farm goods, or food donations -- be made available to the Foreign Agricultural Service to be used for the same purpose as the $330,000 appropriation. Appropriated by Congress: $137,500 (against the $330,000 request). Section 32 funds made available: $100,000.

- For the Department of Commerce, to expand dissemination of export promotion information by the Office of Field Services, the President asked a special appropriation of $250,000. Appropriated by Congress: $100,000.

- For the Department of Commerce, to expand Business and Defense Services Administration research and information-collection on foreign markets available for specific U.S. commodities, the President requested a $350,000 supplemental. Appropriated by Congress: $200,000.

- For the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, to improve services to exporters, stimulate business interest in exports, intensify efforts to remove trade barriers to U.S. goods and promote travel to the U.S., the President asked $1.2 million. Appropriated by Congress: $500,000.

- For the State Department, to post additional commercial officers overseas to help U.S. business to expand exports, to improve commercial library facilities at foreign service posts and to establish pilot trade centers at London and Bangkok, the President asked $1,015,000. Appropriated by Congress: $125,000.

- For the State Department, to permit additional entertainment of foreign business and Government officials under the export promotion program, the President asked $27,000. Appropriated by Congress: Nothing.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- March 31 -- Secretary of Commerce Frederick H. Mueller established a five-member Export Expansion Committee to organize "a sustained effort by private industry to promote the American export trade expansion program."

The group was formed in response to the President's March 17 statement, in which he had said that as part of a program to promote the growth of the nation's export trade, he had asked the Secretary "to enlist the active support of existing national and local business groups."

Leonard F. McCollum was named chairman.

In addition to McCollum, president of the Continental Oil Co., the Committee membership included Rudolph F. Barnow, president of the National Assn. of Manufacturers; Donald K. David, vice chairman of the Ford Foundation; Arthur H. Motley, president-elect of the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S.; and Morehead Patterson, chairman of the American Machine and Foundry Co.

Nov. 9 -- The Census Bureau reported that U.S. exports in 1960, through the end of September, were valued at $14,412,600,000 excluding shipments under military portions of the Mutual Security Program. The January-September figures for 1960 represented a 17 percent rise over exports for the corresponding period of 1959 ($11,995,800,000).

Senate Committee Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HEARINGS -- April 25, 26, 28, 29, May 2, 3, 5, 6, 9, 10 on the U.S. position in foreign trade and President Eisenhower's export expansion program. Before the hearings, Committee Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) March 18 said the President's proposals appeared on first examination to be sound but "the main question in my mind is whether the program adds up to action sufficiently bold to meet the need or represents only a declaration of intent to do what we are already doing, only better." A Committee staff report, based on an eight-month survey of U.S. exports, was released April 23 and it concluded that U.S. exports had followed a "generally increasing yet highly unpredictable up-and-down course" since World War II while other industrial countries' exports had shown a "steady upsurge". The report recommended: establishment of a system of guarantees for export credit, to protect the lender against all types of risks; reestablishment of the foreign commercial service, merged in 1939 into the State Department foreign service as an overseas operation of the Commerce Department; and creation of a "U.S. office of travel and tourism to promote more visits by foreigners to this country."

TESTIMONY -- April 25 -- Secretary of Commerce Frederick H. Mueller said "only a small number of American companies, and those mostly the larger ones, are engaged in foreign trade," and that "our exports will not increase sufficiently to balance our accounts unless a sense of national urgency is created." Mueller said the "underlying concern" must be whether the U.S. was "sufficiently competitive" to reduce substantially a deficit in the total balance of payments -- the difference between payments to foreign countries and receipts from them. He said trends indicated the U.S. in 1960 should experience a recovery from an export slump which began in 1957, but he emphasized that "in even the most optimistic predictions the improvement is insufficient to reduce the deficit in our balance of payments to a tolerable level." Mueller said "only the individual private businessman can solve our problem by using his initiative, ingenuity, drive and knowledge in foreign markets." The Government's function, he said, was "to help him mobilize, to service him with the facts which he cannot obtain independently and, most vitally, to aid him in every possible way by eliminating foreign government discriminations and improving the climate of trade."

April 26 -- Alfred H. von Kleinperer, assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, said the best cure for the deficit was an aggressive job of American salesmanship aimed at increasing export earnings by 20 percent to 25 percent. He warned against limiting imports, because "we will also cut our exports because trade is reciprocal."

Ray W. McDonald, vice president of the Burroughs Corp. of Detroit, said U.S. business typically invested abroad only "to serve markets which otherwise could not be served directly from the United States," and that exports in his own firm, concentrated in complex office machines, had risen despite foreign investment.

April 28 -- Samuel C. Waugh, president of the Export-Import Bank, explained the bank's new Government-backed program for insuring short term (up to 180 days) commercial export transactions against political risks (war, expropriation, inconvertibility, etc.). Under the plan commercial banks extending credit to exporters would insure against political risks as agents for Eximbank.

Von Klemperer, said the Administration had decided that the Government, through Eximbank, should help exporters by expanding its insurance program against political risks, but let commercial insurance companies guarantee exporters against commercial risks (credit failures, etc.). Von Klemperer indicated the Administration would reevaluate its policy if commercial firms failed to cover commercial risks.

Francis C. Scafuro, chairman of the National Coordinating Committee for Export Credit Guarantees of the International Section, New York Board of Trade, outlined his group's plan for a federally-chartered Export Credit Guarantee Corporation which would insure exporters against political, commercial and catastrophic risks. The new corporation would be privately financed and controlled, but would borrow Treasury funds when necessary. Scafuro said the corporation would be similar to governmental organizations currently guaranteeing West European and Japanese traders against commercial or political losses. He said the new Eximbank plan would "not equal the effectiveness of a single, well-integrated and specialized export credit guarantee organization."

Numerous U.S. exporting firms testified, most of them favoring Scafuro's plan. Richard G. Lurie, editor of American Exporter Publications, said a survey of U.S. exporters showed that total U.S. exports in 1959 might have been 10% higher if a comprehensive export credit insurance program, such as existed in other countries, had been available to U.S. manufacturers.

May 2 -- Bradley Fisk, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for International Affairs, said the Government had only recently begun active steps to encourage foreign travel to the U.S. because previous U.S. policy had dictated a maximum export of American dollars and minimum import of foreign capital to encourage economic recovery abroad after World War II. He said President Eisenhower's proclamation of 1960 as "Visit the United States of America Year" marked the beginning of the "first concentrated effort to increase the flow of travel to this country from abroad." Fisk said the U.S. was promoting foreign visits through limited programs of the Office of International Travel in the Commerce Department, the Travel Advisory Committee and the Interdepartmental Travel Policy Committee.

May 2-3 -- Representatives of U.S. travel agencies, transportation and hotel industries and advertising agencies endorsed the principles of S 3102, introduced by Committee Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.), to create an Office of International Travel and Tourism in the Commerce Department to promote travel to the U.S. under an estimated annual budget of up to $5 million dollars. Witnesses said the Government must take a more active role in promoting tourism. They recommended travel promotion offices in foreign cities, extensive advertising campaigns, low cost accommodations, removal of visa requirements for foreign visitors, and negotiation of further relaxation of currency restrictions.

TRADE WITH SOVIETS

May 5 -- Assistant Secretary of State Thomas C. Mann said the United States "stands ready to sell a wide range of nonstrategic commodities to the European Soviet bloc countries at any time that they wish to buy them and are in a position to pay for them," but the current "low level" of trade was "the result of conscious policy on the part of the Soviet Union and its European satellites." Exports to Russia and other Eastern European nations totaled only .4% of all U.S. exports, in the last quarter of 1959, he said. Mann said the U.S. embargo on trade with Communist China was "designed to hinder as much as possible" that government's buildup of military power and political influence. Any relaxation in the embargo would weaken U.S. influence and be seen as "a harbinger of a possible political accommodation," he said.

May 6 -- Assistant Secretary of Commerce Bradley Fisk said Sino-Soviet bloc trade with the free world had been growing "at a substantial rate in the past decade and may well continue to increase at a steady but modest increment." He said the "threat" in this "trade drive" was that "less developed areas may come to rely economically more and more" upon the bloc.

Soviet trade policies were analyzed by professors Joseph Berliner of Syracuse University and Franklyn D. Holzman of the University of Washington and by Irving Lipkowitz, director of economic affairs for Reynolds Metal Co. Berliner and Holzman stressed Soviet political aims in trade with underdeveloped countries. Lipkowitz reviewed Soviet "dumping" practices, said there could be no comparison with other dumping procedures because Soviet trading agencies operate under no "capitalistic inhibitions." He said "market machinery" must be created to insure fair competition.

May 9 -- Herbert E. Harris II, American Farm Bureau Federation, said agriculture "has more to lose than any other segment of our economy if we are not able to expand foreign trade" because unlike industry, farmers could not move to a foreign area to improve their competitive position. He said the U.S. "must insist" that other countries promptly remove "discriminatory restrictions" against U.S. exports.

May 10 -- George W. Ball, Washington attorney for the European Common Market's Economic Commission, said American firms producing in Europe should not be viewed with alarm because it was "the classic pursuit of a normal, healthy, economic motive of seeking to exploit a new mass market."

Martin Hearn, Florida Citrus Mutual, said of all U.S. exported items, agricultural commodities "stand to lose most in the emergence of the European Common Market." He said agricultural exports in the past ten years totaled 23 percent of all export trade and provided a "tremendous stimulating price effect" on the remaining crops sold domestically. He proposed use of advisory groups from industry to assist not only in planning by government agencies but also to aid "behind the scenes at international conferences."

O.R. Strackbein, chairman of the Nation-wide Committee on Import-Export Policy, reviewed what he said was the U.S.' "precarious competitive position in the world," and said other countries in a similar position had been "helped inestimably" by placing" severe restrictions on imports, resorting in the process to import licenses, exchange controls, import quotas and other devices." The U.S. should learn the lesson, he said, and "apply it before it is too late."

TOURISM BILL APPROVED

Following the hearings, the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee May 27 reported the bill (S 3102 -- S Rept 1493) authorizing $5 million for expansion of a Commerce Department program to encourage tourists from abroad to visit the U.S.

The Committee said the "imbalance between the U.S. foreign travel expenditures and receipts -- $980 million -- accounted for almost 27 percent of our total balance-of-payments deficit of $3.7 billion in 1959."

The Senate passed S 3102 June 7 by voice vote, but the House took no action and the measure died with the adjournment of the 86th Congress.

To carry out the program, the bill as passed by the Senate would have established in the Commerce Department an Office of International Travel with a director and staff, to be advised by a Travel Advisory Board of 12 part-time, non-governmental personnel. The Office would encourage more host arrangements and tourist facilities in the United States, coordinate federal travel services, participate in the International Cooperation Administration's technical assistance and economic development programs, and collect and publish travel information.

Presidential Action

President Eisenhower Nov. 16 took steps to cut back U.S. spending overseas in order to rectify the U.S. balance-of-payments deficit and prevent a continued outflow of gold from the U.S.

In a public statement and directive to federal agencies, the President said the U.S. was sending about $8.5 billion a year overseas through private long-term capital investment abroad, short-term acquisition of foreign assets, foreign-aid payments and spending for maintenance of American troops abroad. Part of the loss was offset by surpluses of exports over imports by approximately $1 billion to $4 billion a year, and by other payments exchanges, the President said, but since 1957 the balance-of-payments deficit of the U.S. had been $10 billion, and there had been a decline of about $4.5 billion in the Treasury Department's gold stocks.

(The Federal Reserve Board Nov. 25 announced that U.S. gold holdings as of Nov. 23 were $17,986,000,000, the lowest amount since 1940. Foreign governments and individuals held about $18 billion in dollars and other liquid obligations at that time, which meant that if all requested payment in gold at once, the U.S. gold stocks would be wiped out, but this was not considered a real possibility.)

GENERAL POLICIES

The President said these general policies would be followed:

- International Trade -- The U.S. would continue to press its export-expansion efforts, and to negotiate to get other nations to reduce tariff and quota restrictions.
- International Finance -- The U.S. would insist that its friends and allies accept a fair share of the costs of maintaining military security and financing long-term development of underdeveloped countries; urge international lending institutions not to use dollars where possible, and urge strong-currency nations to permit such institutions to seek funds in their capital markets; and try to cut back various governmental operations.
- Domestic Economy -- The Government would "continue to implement fiscal, financial, monetary and debt-management policies of the Government and the Federal Reserve System designed to avoid inflation"; and to urge labor and capital to take all reasonable steps to insure the competitive position overseas of U.S. goods.

SPECIFIC DIRECTIVES

The President ordered the following steps taken:

The armed forces and Coast Guard were ordered to reduce military procurement overseas.

All Government agencies with civilian employees overseas were to reduce the number as much as possible. Military dependents living overseas with their servicemen husbands and fathers were to be reduced from 484,000 persons to 200,000 persons, by bringing dependents back to the U.S. at a rate of 15,000 a month beginning Jan. 1, 1961.

The International Cooperation Administration and Development Loan Fund were to place "primary emphasis" on financing purchases by nations receiving aid and loans, of goods of U.S. origin.

State Department or U.S. embassy commissaries overseas were to be limited in buying non-U.S. goods.

The Agriculture Department was to increase efforts to see that food surplus disposal programs did not impede purchases of U.S. farm goods for dollars.

The State Department was to make special efforts to maximize tariff concessions, get foreign nations to permit their nationals to spend more money on tourist trips to the U.S.

(Officials estimated the President's directives would cut foreign spending of the U.S. by about $1 billion a year -- half of it as a result of reduction in spending by military dependents.)

WEST GERMAN TALKS

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Nov. 23 -- Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson and Under Secretary of State Douglas Dillon ended three days of financial discussion in Bonn about the possibility of the West German government assuming a greater share of the military and foreign aid costs of the Western Alliance. Specifically, the United States asked Bonn to contribute $600 million in 1961 toward the maintenance of U.S. troops in Germany.

When the talks ended, the parties released a joint communique which indicated the Bonn government had refused to put up the $600 million for troop maintenance, but which stated that arrangements had been made to protect the gold reserve of the United States by allowing for a greater West German contribution to the costs of maintaining western defense and foreign aid. The communique said West Germany in 1961 would contribute between $720 million and $958 million to its foreign aid program.

U-2 INCIDENT WRECKS PARIS SUMMIT MEETING

Diplomatic relations between the United States and the Soviet Union suffered a severe setback in 1960 in the wake of President Eisenhower's acknowledgement that an American U-2 reconnaissance plane shot down over Russia May 1 was on an official intelligence-gathering mission for which the U.S. Government offered no apologies. As a direct result of the U-2 incident, Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev broke off his long-planned summit meeting with the President, British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan and French President Charles de Gaulle, and cancelled an invitation to Mr. Eisenhower to visit Russia.

On the domestic scene, Democrats locked horns with Republicans over the Administration's handling of the incident; the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, after a closed-door inquiry into the matter, issued a circumspect but nonetheless critical report. Although the issue itself did not enter into the Presidential campaign, Republicans made much of an early comment by Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) that the President might have expressed his regrets to Khrushchev.

On the international scene, the strain imposed by the incident contributed to the subsequent collapse of East-West disarmament talks and the President's refusal to meet with Khrushchev during the latter's unbidden visit to the United States to attend sessions of the United Nations General Assembly in September. Following are the details of steps leading to the summit, a chronology of the U-2 incident, domestic political repercussions, the hearings and report of the Foreign Relations Committee, and highlights of the incident's aftermath.

Route to Summit

Hopes for an East-West accommodation on such issues as Germany and disarmament rose in 1955, when the Big Four heads of government held their first post-war conference in Geneva, July 18-23, even though President Eisenhower warned that the meeting "can, at the best, be only a beginning in a renewed effort that may last a generation." In the event, the "smiles of Geneva" quickly vanished and no substantial agreement ensued. Reluctant to run the risk of raising false hopes once more, the President held out for more than one year before agreeing to Premier Khrushchev's demand for another summit conference. "The most we can hope," the President said April 27, 1960 of the forthcoming May 16 encounter, "is ease of tension, some evidence that we are coming closer together."

Soviet efforts to scale the summit for a second time began in December 1957, when Premier Bulganin proposed a new meeting to seek a general European political settlement and a disarmament agreement. Preliminary talks by the foreign ministers opened in Moscow April 17, 1958 but came to a fruitless end in mid-June when Khrushchev, who had become Premier March 27, accused the West of sabotaging the proposed conference by laying down impossible conditions. Subsequent moves took place in the following sequence:

July 19, 1958 -- Khrushchev called for an immediate meeting with Eisenhower, Macmillan, de Gaulle, and Prime Minister Nehru of India to deal with the "armed intervention" of U.S. and British forces in the Middle East following overthrow of Iraq's pro-Western regime July 14. Eisenhower countered July 22 with a proposal for a meeting in the framework of the United Nations Security Council. Khrushchev at first agreed, then backed down Aug. 5 after returning from talks in Peking with China's Mao Tse-tung. Thereupon the Middle East problem was turned over to the UN General Assembly.

Nov. 10, 1958 -- Khrushchev announced Soviet intentions of handing over to the Communist regime of East Germany all Soviet functions in divided Berlin, and demanded an end to the city's four-power occupation. In notes to the Western powers Nov. 27, he set a six-month deadline for negotiation of a new status for Berlin. In their replies Dec. 14, the U.S., Britain, and France rejected the implied Soviet ultimatum, and in notes to Moscow Feb. 16, 1959 proposed a foreign ministers' conference "to deal with the problem of Germany in all its aspects". Khrushchev, in a Feb. 24 speech, insisted on a summit meeting instead, but on March 3 the Soviets agreed to a foreign ministers' meeting. In a March 16 broadcast, President Eisenhower expressed his willingness to meet with Khrushchev if the foreign ministers made progress, a position that was reiterated March 23 following talks with Prime Minister Macmillan.

May 11, 1959 -- The foreign ministers' conference opened in Geneva and almost immediately became deadlocked, the Soviets insisting on immediate peace treaties with East and West Germany, the West opposing a treaty until Germany could be reunified through free elections. The conference broke off June 20, was resumed July 13, then recessed indefinitely Aug. 5 without reaching any agreement on Berlin or related questions. Meanwhile, the President Aug. 3 announced that Khrushchev had accepted an invitation to visit the United States and that he would visit the Soviet Union in turn later on.

Sept. 15, 1959 -- Khrushchev arrived in Washington and, in a speech to the United Nations General Assembly Sept. 18, proposed "general and complete disarmament" within four years. Following talks with the President at Camp David Sept. 26-27, it was agreed to reopen negotiations on Berlin. Khrushchev had agreed "there could be no fixed time limit" on these, the President said Sept. 28, and had thus "removed many of the objections that I have heretofore had" to a summit meeting.

Dec. 21, 1959 -- Following a meeting in Paris between Eisenhower, Macmillan, de Gaulle, and West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, the Western powers wrote Khrushchev proposing a summit conference in Paris to discuss disarmament, Germany, and East-West relations. On Dec. 30, Khrushchev agreed to the May 16 date.

Chronology of Incident

Preparations for the Paris meeting were in full swing when the U-2 incident broke on a startled world. Following is a day-by-day summary of what happened:

May 5 -- Addressing the Supreme Soviet in Moscow, Khrushchev said that an American plane, otherwise unidentified, had crossed the Soviet frontier May 1 from Turkey, Iran, or Pakistan, "continued its flight into the interior," and been shot down on government orders. He described the flight as "aggressive provocation aimed at wrecking the summit conference".

In Washington, the State Department said the downed plane might have been an unarmed U-2 weather research plane operated by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, missing since May 1 after taking off from its base in Turkey on a high altitude weather mission. Its civilian pilot had reported trouble with his oxygen equipment, said State, suggesting that he might have lost consciousness and "the plane continued on automatic pilot for a considerable distance and accidentally violated Soviet air space." In a supplemental statement, NASA said the missing plane was one of 10 U-2s used in weather research in various parts of the world since 1956.

May 6 -- The U.S. Embassy in Moscow asked the Soviet government to "provide it with full facts of the Soviet investigation of this incident and to inform it of the fate of the pilot," identified as Francis Gary Powers, a 30-year-old civilian. In Washington, State Department spokesman Lincoln White was quoted as saying "there was no deliberate attempt to violate Soviet air space and there never has been."

May 7 -- Khrushchev informed the Supreme Soviet and the world that the pilot of the missing U-2 had been captured and had confessed that he was on a photo-reconnaissance mission when he was shot down by rocket fire near Sverdlovsk, 900 miles east of Moscow and 1,200 miles north of Afghanistan. According to Khrushchev, Powers had admitted that he was actually employed by the Central Intelligence Agency, that he had made many flights over Soviet territory, and that his final flight had begun April 27 when he flew from Turkey to Peshawar, Pakistan, where he took off May 1 for a 4,000-mile hop across the Soviet Union to Norway. Pounding home his advantage, Khrushchev displayed aerial photos of Soviet airfields taken from Powers' plane and described in detail equipment found in the wreckage and on the pilot, including 7,500 Soviet rubles and a poisoned "suicide" pin. He had withheld all of this information in his May 5 speech, Khrushchev said, "to see what the Americans would invent."

Caught in what appeared to be a barefaced lie, the State Department said "it appears that in endeavoring to obtain information now concealed behind the Iron Curtain, a flight over Soviet territory was probably undertaken by an unarmed civilian U-2 plane." But, the statement added, "there was no authorization" from Washington for the flight described by Khrushchev.

U.S. ACKNOWLEDGES FLIGHT

May 9 -- Following a May 8 conference with President Eisenhower, Secretary of State Christian A. Herter said that, at the President's direction, the U.S. had engaged in "extensive aerial surveillance by unarmed civilian aircraft, normally of a peripheral character but on occasion by penetration." He strongly defended the propriety of such action "to overcome this danger of surprise attack," seeking in effect to shift the onus to the Soviets. Herter's statement was issued after he and CIA Director Allen W. Dulles had given 18 key Senators and Representatives a 90-minute briefing on the situation. In Moscow, meanwhile, Khrushchev warned Turkey, Pakistan and Norway that "if they allow others to fly from their bases to our territory we shall hit at those bases."

May 10 -- Chairman Clarence Cannon (D Mo.) of the House Appropriations Committee told the House that his group had full knowledge of U.S. espionage flights, which he said had been going on since 1946, and that funds for the flights were "justified by honored and established precedent." Although criticism was voiced in other quarters on Capitol Hill, particularly of the timing of the ill-fated flight, no effort was made to revive a 1956 proposal to establish a joint CIA watchdog committee. (1956 Almanac p. 509)

In Moscow, the Soviet government officially protested the May 1 flight in a note that threatened "retaliatory measures" against any repetition and stated that Powers would be brought to trial.

May 11 -- President Eisenhower, in a statement to his news conference, took full responsibility for ordering the overflights, and defended the U.S. Government's intelligence activities as "a distasteful but vital necessity." He described the Soviet "fetish of secrecy and concealment" as "a major cause of international tension and uneasiness today," and said he would renew his 1959 "open skies" proposal at the summit meeting.

In Moscow, Khrushchev expressed doubt that the President would be welcome in Russia, where he was scheduled to arrive June 10. Speaking off-the-cuff at a display of Powers' "spy equipment" and plane wreckage, he said: "The Russian people would say I was mad to welcome a man who sends spy planes over here like that."

May 12 -- Moscow censors released Khrushchev's further remarks of May 11, describing Herter's statement of May 8 as one "that could only be made by a country in a state of war." Terming the overflight a "gangster and bandit raid," he said Powers would be tried "severely as a spy". In Washington, the State Department dispatched a note to Moscow rejecting its May 10 protest.

May 13 -- The Soviet Union delivered notes to Turkey, Pakistan, and Norway protesting their alleged involvement in the flight of the ill-fated U-2, which the Russians claimed was enroute from Pakistan to Norway when shot down by rocket fire over Sverdlovsk. At the same time, the chief of the Soviet Air Force, Air Marshal K.A. Vershinin, cancelled a courtesy visit to the United States shortly before his scheduled takeoff, suggesting postponement until "a more suitable time."

May 14 -- Premier Khrushchev arrived in Paris for the summit conference and issued a mild statement promising to "exert all effort to make the conference a success." In Moscow, the Soviets announced they had launched a 4½ ton "space ship" with a "dummy spaceman" aboard, placing it in a 200-mile orbit around the earth.

May 15 -- President Eisenhower and British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan arrived in Paris amid signs of crisis. Both conferred with French President Charles de Gaulle and West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer. In separate meetings with Khrushchev, Macmillan and de Gaulle urged the Soviet leader to abandon his combative position on the U-2 incident, but without success.

May 16 -- In a three-hour meeting of the Big Four, Khrushchev led off with a bitter denunciation of the May 1 "spy flight" and laid down his terms: the conference could proceed only on condition that the United States declare that it "will not violate the state borders of the U.S.S.R. with its aircraft, that it deplores the provocative actions undertaken in the past, and will punish those directly guilty of such actions." He proposed that the conference be postponed for "approximately six to eight months", in a context that suggested he would prefer to deal with the next Administration. Finally, he withdrew his invitation to the President to visit Russia June 10 on grounds he could not be received "with the proper cordiality."

U.S. CANCELS OVERFLIGHTS

In reply, the President repeated his earlier argument that the overflight was a necessary step to guard against surprise attack but had no aggressive intent. He denied Khrushchev's assertion that the U.S. had threatened to continue such flights, revealing that "in point of fact, these flights were suspended after the recent incident and are not to be resumed." He announced plans to submit a proposal to the United Nations for a UN "aerial surveillance to detect preparations for attack". But Khrushchev was "left in no doubt by me," the President reported, "that his ultimatum would never be acceptable to the United States." Khrushchev, however, "brushed aside all arguments of reason," the President said, indicating by his behavior that "he came all the way from Moscow to Paris with the sole intention of sabotaging this meeting."

Following the meeting, Charles H. Bohlen, special adviser to the Secretary of State and one of the participants, told reporters that Khrushchev had said the plane incident "was a matter that involved deeply the internal politics of the Soviet Union," a statement Bohlen said he had never heard at any similar meeting. Bohlen also said Khrushchev "seemed to me to be rather ill at ease" and "seemed to pay a great deal of attention" to Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and the Defense Minister, Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky. Bohlen's remarks, coupled with the fact that Malinovsky remained at Khrushchev's side during their entire stay in Paris, prompted widespread speculation by Western observers that the Soviet Army was behind Khrushchev's unbending truculence.

CONFERENCE ENDS

May 17 -- After meeting with Eisenhower and Macmillan, de Gaulle invited Khrushchev to join them. The invitation was refused, however, and the Soviet premier repeated his earlier argument that the summit conference had never begun and could begin only after the U.S. agreed "to condemn the treacherous incursion" of May 1 and "publicly express regrets". The three Western leaders were reported as feeling "complete disgust" at the Soviet attitude. Each side issued communiques blaming the other for the collapse of the conference.

May 18 -- In a final press conference before leaving Paris for East Germany, Khrushchev reiterated all of his earlier charges against the United States in pungent language. Noting that President Eisenhower, in announcing suspension of further overflights, had added that he could not bind his successor in office, Khrushchev said "international relations cannot be built on the term of this or that official." He said he had intended to raise the issue of overflights with Eisenhower during their Camp David talks in September 1959, but "then I became apprehensive and I thought there was something fishy about this friend of mine." As for reaching any agreement with the United States, he said "we can wait and, if the next President doesn't understand that, we can wait some more."

Regarding the subjects the Big Four never got around to discussing -- Berlin, disarmament, and a nuclear test ban -- Khrushchev said:

- Berlin -- "When we consider the time to be right," the Soviets would sign a treaty with East Germany, thus depriving the Western powers of "the right to maintain their troops in West Berlin."
- Disarmament -- "What is going on now at Geneva is merely procrastination." If continued, the Soviets would take the matter back to the UN General Assembly.
- Test Ban -- "We shall continue our negotiations at Geneva.... But if Eisenhower threatens that he will continue testing then we too will follow suit."

Meanwhile, Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko demanded an urgent meeting of the UN Security Council "to halt the unheard-of provocative action of the United States."

May 19 -- Replying to a May 13 protest from Norway regarding the U-2 incident, the Department of State said "assurances" had been given, in line with the President's statement in Paris, that no further flights would be undertaken. A similar protest was filed May 17 by Pakistan. Meanwhile, Gen. Thomas D. White, Air Force Chief of Staff, told the Senate Appropriations Committee that Soviet behavior in Paris indicated an "irrationality" on their part and suggested adding two squadrons of Atlas missiles to the defense program.

SUMMIT AFTERMATH

Stopping briefly in Portugal May 19, the President said that "rather than be dismayed, we must tighten our belts, keep our chins up, and each of us work a little harder" for the cause of peace. On his return to Washington May 20, he warned that "we can be watchful for more irritations, possibly other incidents," citing a report just received that an unarmed C-47 transport plane was missing over West Germany. (Forced down by Soviet fighters after straying over the East German border, the plane and its nine American passengers were released May 25 by Soviet authorities after a perfunctory protest.) At the same time, the President was reported to have written leaders of some two dozen free world nations defending his position on the U-2 incident, blaming the Soviets for scuttling the conference, and expressing hope for the future.

Meanwhile, Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev informed the world that the Soviets would make no effort to force the Berlin issue before another summit conference could be arranged in six to eight months. Speaking May 20 in East Berlin, he repeated his earlier charge that the conference "was torpedoed by the aggressive actions of the ruling circles of the U.S.A." But he pledged that "we will not do anything to sharpen the international situation and to bring it back to the worst times of the cold war." Regarding Berlin, he said "it makes sense to wait" for another conference and "to retain the existing situation." But the Soviets had no intention, he said, "of sitting by the sea forever and waiting for good weather."

At Soviet request, the 11-member United Nations Security Council met May 23 to consider a Soviet resolution condemning as "aggressive" acts "the incursions of United States aircraft into other states." In an atmosphere laden with propaganda, Soviet and U.S. spokesmen traded charges of espionage, while a group of smaller nations put forward another resolution calling on the Big Four "to resume discussions as soon as possible."

In debate May 26 Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko said President Eisenhower was following "a policy of dangerous provocations which place mankind on the brink of war", and U.S. Delegate Henry Cabot Lodge described Gromyko's remarks as "atrocious". Lodge showed a carved wooden seal of the United States which he said was presented to the U.S. embassy in Moscow by Russians and hung in the ambassador's office until a microphone was found hidden in it.

The Security Council May 26 rejected the Soviet resolution by a 7-2 vote, with Ceylon and Tunisia abstaining. Next day, with the Soviet Union and Poland abstaining, the Council voted 9-0 to adopt the small-nation resolution calling on the major powers to resume disarmament talks. There was no censure of U.S. flights over Soviet territory.

In Peiping, Communist China May 27 said American U-2 jets had made at least three flights over the China mainland.

May 28 -- Soviet Premier Khrushchev said in a radio address "American hotheads" had wrecked the summit conference and the United States had to be taken down "a peg or two". He said, "The road to hell is paved with good intentions and he (President Eisenhower) will really get there."

May 30 -- Soviet Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky said he had ordered rocket strikes at the takeoff base of any foreign plane that violated air space of the Soviet Union or its partners.

Norwegian Foreign Minister Halvard Lange said Norway would give no more permits for reconnaissance flights by allied aircraft without special approval of the Norwegian government.

May 31 -- French President Charles De Gaulle said the May 1 U-2 flight was "untimely" but not sufficient motive for the Soviets to wreck the conference.

Japanese Foreign Minister Aiichiro Fujiyama said the U.S. had assured Japan that U-2 planes based in that country were used only for weather observation and the Japanese Government was not considering asking that the planes be withdrawn.

Political Repercussions

Democratic and Republican leaders were quick to react to the U-2 incident and the subsequent collapse of the summit meeting. Prior to May 16, Democratic criticism was muted by expressions of national unity of purpose; following the denouement of Paris, it grew sharper, as did GOP rebuttals.

Adlai E. Stevenson set the tone of pre-summit comment when he said May 12: "Our Government has blundered and admitted it. The blunder has made the President's task at the summit meeting more difficult. Changes must and will be made. But this is no time for partisan censure. The summit is too fateful for any American to risk making the President's task even more difficult." Sen. Kennedy made the same point May 16, saying that Khrushchev "cannot divide America on partisan lines in matters affecting the security of the United States."

Stevenson, House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas), Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) and Sen. J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, May 17 sent a telegram to President Eisenhower in Paris saying: "As leaders of the Democratic party of the United States, we earnestly urge you to convey to Premier Khrushchev the views of the opposition party in your country that he reconsider his suggestion for postponement of the summit conference until after the national elections in this country.

"We feel that total failure of the conference and increasing mistrust on both sides will be serious and deeply disturbing to the whole world.

"All of the American people earnestly desire peace, an end to the arms race and ever-better relations between our countries. We ask you as the leader of this Nation to see that these views are conveyed to Mr. Khrushchev."

Also on May 17, however, Kennedy made the statement that "you can't have lived in this country during the last week without realizing it is time for a change; you can't be a citizen without realizing that the Republican claims of peace and prosperity are blowing up in smoke."

KENNEDY STATEMENT

On May 18, Kennedy made the comment concerning "regrets" later cited by Republicans as evidence of his lack of qualifications for the Presidency. This was his statement:

"Once the summit had broken up and once Mr. Khrushchev indicated his refusal to continue, I don't think the U.S. could -- but -- he said there were two conditions for continuing. One, that we apologize. I think that might have been possible to do." The other condition, Kennedy said, was that "we try those responsible for the flight. We could not do that.... If he had merely asked that the U.S. should express regret then that would have been a reasonable term."

Stevenson spoke next, in much more critical terms. In a Chicago speech May 19, the two-time Democratic nominee said: "Premier Khrushchev wrecked this conference. Let there be no mistake about that.... But we handed Khrushchev the crowbar and the sledgehammer to wreck the meeting. Without our series of blunders, Mr. Khrushchev would not have had a pretext for making his impossible demands and wild charges." The "hard, inescapable facts," Stevenson said, were "that this Administration played into Khrushchev's hands; that if Khrushchev wanted to wreck the conference our Government made it possible; that the Administration has acutely embarrassed our allies and endangered our bases; that they have helped make successful negotiations with the Russians -- negotiations that are vital to our survival -- impossible so long as they are in power." The Nation, he said, "cannot sweep this whole sorry mess under the rug in the name of national unity."

Stevenson's broadside touched off both interparty and intraparty reaction. Rallying to Stevenson's side were 38 House Democrats, led by Rep. Frank Kowalski (D Conn.), who wrote the President May 20 that it was "the Administration's responsibility to answer" a series of eight questions dealing with the U-2 incident. (Another 18 House Democrats had signed the letter May 23.) But James A. Farley, former Democratic National Chairman and a supporter of Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) for the Presidential nomination, called Stevenson an "apostle of appeasement". In a statement May 21, Farley called on Democrats to condemn and repudiate Stevenson's "absurd" speech.

Stevenson's criticisms, in turn, drew further endorsement May 22 from the Democratic Advisory Council in a statement saying "the fiasco in Paris raises again the whole issue of the lack of competence of the present Administration." The Eisenhower foreign policy had failed, the Council charged, "because of its fundamental lack of purpose and integrity."

GOP REJOINDERS

Republicans also responded cautiously at first to the U-2 incident, then answered Democratic fire round for round.

Republican National Chairman Thruston B. Morton May 12 said, "The American people should feel more secure now that they understand the scope of the intelligence activities being carried out by the United States.... The aircraft surveillance program is part of our unremitting effort to assure no more Pearl Harbors.... I believe that the incident will serve to strengthen the hand of President Eisenhower at the summit meeting. Prior to this incident, Khrushchev may have felt that he held more cards in a mistaken assumption that we were not totally informed on military developments in the Soviet Union."

Vice President Richard M. Nixon May 15 said some good had come from the U-2 incident: "You realize that this flight clearly demonstrates the feasibility of the open skies proposal of the President." Nixon defended the flights over Russia; to criticisms of the timing of the flights, just before the summit meeting, he said, "There is never a right time to make one of these flights, if you're going to be caught." Nixon May 17 said the President had planned to tell Khrushchev at the summit that he would give all U.S. U-2 planes and other espionage equipment to the United Nations for a UN surveillance force.

When Democrats began to talk of a Congressional investigation, Nixon told newsmen in Buffalo May 18: "If they believe we should have allowed a gap in our intelligence, let them investigate it. If they believe the President should have apologized to Mr. Khrushchev, let them investigate."

Stevenson's caustic speech of May 19 provoked the Republican National Committee, which charged May 21 that Stevenson had fallen "like a ton of bricks for the Khrushchev line." By his "disastrously divisive speech at a critical hour," it said, Stevenson "has tried to destroy American unity for personal, partisan political reasons." Rep. William E. Miller (R N.Y.), chairman of the Republican Congressional Committee, commented in like fashion on the letter to the President by House Democrats. "As I recall," said Miller, "the Democrats dropped our guard once before...at Pearl Harbor. We're not going to let that happen again."

Speaking in the Senate May 23, GOP Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) charged that Stevenson himself had "torpedoed" the summit conference in an interview published in a Paris newspaper on the eve of the meeting, in which Stevenson was quoted as approving Western concessions on Berlin, including the reduction of American forces from 11,000 to 7,000, in return for Soviet agreement to a treaty banning nuclear tests. Dirksen speculated that the interview had perusaded Khrushchev that "he might be dealing later with a more gentle, a more tractable, a more flexible, and a less firm President."

Stevenson denied giving French reporter Robert Boulay an interview or making the statements attributed to him during a conversation in Stevenson's home a month earlier. Boulay, in turn, denied that he had misquoted Stevenson. But the incident, brought to the fore by Dirksen, set off a series of angry exchanges in the Senate between Democrats Mansfield, Kennedy, and Symington, and Republicans Dirksen and Hugh Scott (R Pa.).

Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R N.Y.) entered the fray May 23 with a 1,000-word statement calling on both parties to prevent the debate from degenerating "into a clash of absurd partisan absolutes." But he said that "some aspects of American conduct, immediately prior to the conference, demand examination of their purpose and prudence." Rockefeller, who later announced he would accept a draft for the Republican Presidential nomination, thus affirmed his policy of maintaining an independent position vis-a-vis the Administration.

The President, however, made no apologies for American conduct in his address to the nation May 25. He assumed full responsibility for the U-2 flight, saying for the first time that its timing, "considering the imminence of the summit meeting", had been considered and the decision made that "the program should not be halted." He also stated, for the first time, that the initial U.S. statement regarding the missing plane had been deliberately misleading because "protection of our intelligence system and the pilot, and concealment of the plane's mission, still seemed imperative."

Acknowledging that he had ordered further flights of the U-2 stopped before leaving for Paris, he noted that "their usefulness was impaired" and that "new techniques, other than aircraft, are constantly being developed." This was reference to the Midas (missile defense alarm system) satellite, the first of which was successfully launched into orbit May 24 from Cape Canaveral. The President also disclosed that he personally had approved a worldwide military communications alert ordered late May 15 by Secretary of Defense Thomas S. Gates Jr.

As for East-West relations, he said: "We must continue businesslike dealings with the Soviet leaders on outstanding issues, and improve the contacts between our own and the Soviet peoples." Regarding current negotiations with the Soviets on disarmament and a nuclear test ban, he said "we shall not back away, on account of recent events, from (our) efforts or commitments."

INVESTIGATIONS

Two probes of the events preceding the ill-fated summit meeting were launched by Senate Democrats -- one by the Foreign Relations Committee, the other by the Government Operations Committee's National Policy Machinery Subcommittee, headed by Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D Wash.). Both groups heard closed-door testimony by Administration witnesses.

Foreign Relations Committee

Testimony presented to the Foreign Relations Committee was screened for security information before being released, as follows:

TESTIMONY -- May 27 -- Secretary of State Christian A. Herter said President Eisenhower had publicly assumed responsibility for the U-2 espionage flight over the Soviet Union to avoid a "trap" set for him by Premier Khrushchev. Herter said it was better to tell the truth about the flight than to be drawn "deeper into fabricating excuses or disavowing responsibility".

He said he believed the flight was a factor in Khrushchev's decision to wreck the conference and a "convenient handle" for him to use, but, the decision was made before Khrushchev left Moscow and may have been based on a fear of the outcome of the summit meeting, if it had been held. Herter said the U-2 incident may have contributed to undermining Khrushchev's position in the Kremlin.

He said there had been no specific decision not to suspend the U-2 flights during the weeks before the conference and neither Herter nor President Eisenhower knew in advance of the May 1 flight, although they knew of the general program and had approved it.

Under Secretary of State Douglas Dillon, who was in charge of the State Department until May 6 while Herter was abroad, said the Department "at no time" worked directly with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration on "publicity or anything regarding these flights". He said the May 5 NASA statement describing the flight as a weather mission "apparently utilized the general guidelines which had been given them" by the Central Intelligence Agency following conversations between CIA and the State Department.

May 31 -- CIA Director Allen W. Dulles testified for nearly six hours in strict secrecy. Committee Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) later that day said Dulles did not reveal what information the U-2 plane was seeking when it was downed over the Soviet Union May 1. Fulbright said it was unwise for the President to acknowledge responsibility for the flight, and added that the President did so because of questionable decisions by State Department and White House officials, whom Fulbright did not identify. Fulbright said the CIA should not be held accountable for these decisions because Dulles "does not pass on the wisdom of policy but confines himself to the furnishing of information."

June 1 -- Dr. Hugh L. Dryden, Deputy Director of NASA, said White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty referred reporters to NASA and the State Department for information on the U-2 flight, and with newsmen converging on his agency Dryden asked the CIA to provide material for the fictional May 5 statement, although the statement itself was written by NASA. Dryden said that although the National Security Council had decided a few hours prior to the issuance of the statement that the State Department would "handle the publicity" on the U-2 flight, he did not learn about this decision until two days later. The decision was made by the National Security Council while it was meeting with the President outside Washington during a civil defense exercise. He said there was no communication between NASA and the State Department or NASA and the White House before the statement's release. Dryden said he had no knowledge of details of the U-2 program.

June 2 -- Defense Secretary Thomas S. Gates Jr. said the U-2 flights over the Soviet Union produced a wide range of vital information. Gates said as far as he knew there never was any Administration discussion of discontinuing the flights as the date for the summit conference approached. Gates said a military alert he ordered while in Paris for the summit session was prudent and "absolutely essential". He said it was primarily a communications alert, and noted that officials who would be most deeply concerned in any military decisions -- the President, the Secretary of State and himself -- were in Paris.

Gates listed the following persons as taking part in the May 9 conference at which the decision was made for the President to assume responsibility for authorizing U-2 espionage flights: Secretary of State Christian A. Herter, Under Secretary of State Douglas Dillon, Assistant Secretary of State Foy D. Kohler, Charles E. Bohlen of the State Department, Secretary of the Air Force James H. Douglas, Gates and perhaps "one or two others". Gates said that he knew of only one meeting (May 5), in the series of pre-summit conference meetings considering U.S. reaction to the U-2 incident, at which President Eisenhower was present.

COMMITTEE REPORT

The Foreign Relations Committee June 25 released the report (S Rept 1761) of its inquiry into the "Events Relating to the Summit Conference." All six Republicans on the 17-member Committee expressed reservations regarding the majority's conclusions, although four of them signed the report. Major conclusions were as follows:

● MAY 1 U-2 FLIGHT -- The Committee said its deliberations on whether the May 1 flight should have taken place were hampered by Administration refusal to state what information the spy mission was seeking. But the Committee did say that "if one accepts the conclusion that the failure of the mission furnished an excuse for Khrushchev's wrecking of the summit conference, then, in the absence of compelling reasons to the contrary, there is good reason to conclude that the flight should not have gone."

The Committee said there was "no reason to believe that technical preparations for the flight were faulty or that the pilot was unreliable in any respect.... From the technical point of view...what befell the U-2 on May 1 was just plain bad luck."

The Committee said "little, if any, consideration was given to the proximity of May 1 to the date of the summit conference", and the argument made in testimony, that if diplomatic considerations were taken into account there would always be a reason for canceling a flight, was "not really persuasive because it fails fully to recognize the importance of the summit conference."

On the Administration's refusal to say what the U-2 mission was trying to find, the Committee said it was "strongly of the opinion that a government based upon a separation of powers cannot exist on faith alone. (The Committee) is disappointed that the responsible officials of the Executive Branch did not see fit to confide in it this one piece of information which is crucial to reaching an informed judgment. The Committee recognizes that the Administration has the legal right to refuse the information under the doctrine of Executive privilege."

● U.S. REACTION TO THE U-2 DOWNING -- The Committee concluded that the U.S. reaction to the failure of the U-2's May 1 mission "complicated the problems which resulted from that failure."

First, the report said, the "cover story" issued May 5 by NASA that the flight was a routine weather research mission "was inadequate for the circumstances which in fact existed." The purpose of the flight was known by those responsible for the cover story, the Committee said, and "it would have been a reasonable assumption that the chances were quite good that the plane was nowhere near the Soviet border", but actually deep inside the Soviet Union, near Sverdlovsk, 1,200 miles inside Russia.

The Committee said "perhaps too much emphasis may have been placed on justification of the flights. If justification was to be made, it would have been enough simply to say we were seeking intelligence vital to our own security."

A third point on the U.S. handling of the incident was that although "the record is full of references to coordination among the various agencies of the Government...at crucial points, the coordination broke down." The Committee gave as examples the fact that NASA issued its statement two or three hours after it had been decided by the officials concerned following a National Security Council meeting that only the State Department would issue a statement and "there are few, if any, references in the record to direction." The report said direction was "what was most lacking in this period. There were many interagency meetings to coordinate activities, but there was apparently no one official or agency to direct activities. If this direction is not to come from the White House, then it ought to be made clear, by the White House, that it is to come from the State Department. Indeed, one of the lessons to be learned from this whole affair is the need for reasserting the primacy of the State Department in these matters."

● SUMMIT FAILURE -- The report absolved President Eisenhower of any blame for his handling of the situation in Paris as the summit conference was about to begin -- "given the situation which existed by the time the President arrived in Paris."

On the "crucial questions" of whether the U-2 incident "was the reason or the excuse for Khrushchev's behavior and whether his behavior would have been significantly different if the U-2 incident had been handled differently", the report said "there probably would have been a summit conference" if the U-2 incident had not occurred, but this did not mean that it would have been successful. The Committee said if it was Khrushchev's purpose to prevent the summit, "the U-2 incident made his task easier".

The Committee said it was more difficult to assess whether Khrushchev's behavior in Paris would have been "significantly different" if the incident had been handled differently, but it "seems reasonable to suppose" that the Soviet reaction was intensified by the general interpretation of U.S. statements to mean that the flights would continue and by the personal assumption of responsibility for the flight by Mr. Eisenhower.

● CURRENT SITUATION -- The report said "the Committee is inclined to agree with Secretary Herter that the basic realities of the world situation have not greatly changed." The report said evidence was "neither solid or consistent" but there were "indications" that Khrushchev, who had been following a "less aggressive course", was reacting in Paris to pressure from his own military and from the Chinese Communists. If this was so, the Committee said, the U.S. should "encourage Soviet proponents of a peaceful course".

Finally the Committee said the U-2 incident illustrated the need for international agreement on how high sovereignty extended skyward. The Committee said it hoped the United Nations would study the problem and try to bring about agreement.

In a separate statement, Sens. Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) and Alexander Wiley (R Wis.) who abstained from approving the report, said "bad luck, not bad judgment" caused the U-2 incident; President Eisenhower "had to state the truth" about the flight; the U-2 incident gave Khrushchev "an excuse for wrecking the conference" but it "was the cause, not the actual reason" for his doing so.

Sens. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa), George D. Aiken (R Vt.), Frank Carlson (R Kan.) and John J. Williams (R Del.) said they "joined in approving the Committee report, which is a result of composite committee views" but they believed Wiley and Lausche stated "concisely and succinctly reasonable and proper conclusions... and we express our general approval of their statement."

Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) said he voted against the report because he did not think "it promotes the best interests of the United States and international relations."

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- June 25 -- Wiley said the report was "falsely premised" and "illogical". Defending the Administration's action, Wiley said sending the May 1 spy flight was wise; the flight's failure did not contribute to the summit collapse; the "weather flight" cover story was properly used and "properly abandoned" when the Soviet Government proved it had detailed knowledge of the flight. Wiley said that following the summit, "It is important that the U.S. -- and particularly the Senate Foreign Relations Committee -- not provide ammunition for the Soviet Premier to use against our country."

FULBRIGHT SPEECH

June 29 -- In a Senate floor speech, Foreign Relations Committee Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) said the American people must be told the truth to "discharge their duty as citizens.... It would be easier, more pleasant, and I am sure more popular, to join those who pretend that all is well, that the summit meeting was a triumph for the West and that the Japanese fiasco only demonstrates once again the viciousness of the Communists." Fulbright said "the prestige and influence of our country on the affairs of nations has reached a new low." He listed errors he felt the Administration made in the U-2 incident and said the gravest mistakes were "the assumption of Presidential responsibility and the self-righteous attempts to justify the flights in terms which implied their continuation.... This attitude of smug self-righteousness must have been unbearably provocative to the Soviet Government and contributed substantially to the violence and intemperate bad manners of...Mr. Khrushchev at Paris." Fulbright also said discussion of the wisdom of the President's taking responsibility for the flight "has frequently been confused by irrelevant arguments over whether or not President Eisenhower should lie or tell the truth.... My argument is that he should not as the head of our Nation have become personally involved in the incident one way or the other."

Fulbright said "if we can disabuse ourselves of the habit of self-delusion, of viewing defeats as victories and of advertising blunders as strokes of genius, there are some things we can learn from these sad events": First, there was need for better coordination and "much firmer direction of foreign relations -- "what is lacking...is not so much coordination as direction.... Elaborate arrangements for coordination are really nothing more than a poor substitute for a firm hand directing affairs. It is the difference between making a hurried phone call to Gettysburg for approval of a coordinated position and receiving clear instructions based upon reflective consideration from the White House."

Second, Fulbright said, there should be "no direct, public link" between the President and the espionage activities of U.S. intelligence agencies, but closer policy control over those agencies should be kept by the Executive Branch.

Third, Fulbright said, "Short of the madness of preventive war, I can think of nothing more dangerous than to resume overflights of the Soviet Union. These overflights were useful while they lasted, but they have now obviously become, as the professionals describe it, compromised."

Policy Machinery Group

The less extensive probe undertaken by the Jackson Subcommittee, as part of its continuing study of national policy machinery (see story p. 721), resulted in a brief report issued June 17, summarizing seven basic assumptions concerning intelligence work, as follows:

(1) The free world needed intelligence activities to insure its survival. Intelligence was as important as armed strength, particularly in the age of push-button weapons, when intelligence constituted the first line of defense.

(2) Intelligence operations were instruments of national policy, should be subject to effective and continuing higher review and coordination weighing gains against risks.

(3) Collection and evaluation of intelligence was a job for professionals. Intelligence organization should be tight, centralized, responsive and to the greatest possible extent anonymous.

(4) Officials depending on intelligence must be professional in handling the problems it raised.

(5) The conduct of diplomacy should be insulated from sensitive intelligence operations; the latter were a source of information for diplomacy, not part of it.

(6) Public revelation of sensitive intelligence was never a harmless act. It both jeopardized the normal conduct of foreign relations and compromised the sources of vital intelligence. If public statements had to be made at all, they should be made only in response to overriding national interest and on the responsibility and under the control from the outset of one high authority.

(7) The "golden word" of intelligence was silence. More could be lost by saying too much, too soon, than by saying too little, too slowly.

The report concluded that "recent events have not altered the need for adherence to these principles. They have in fact attested to their wisdom."

Other Developments

Two days after release of the Foreign Relations Committee's report, delegates of the Soviet Union, Bulgaria, Rumania, Czechoslovakia and Poland June 27 withdrew from the 10-nation disarmament conference in Geneva. Soviet delegates, who had submitted a new disarmament plan June 2, broke up the conference, charging Western refusal to negotiate seriously, just as the United States and four other Western nations were about to present a counterproposal. The same day (June 27), the Soviets called on the UN General Assembly to take up the disarmament issue at its September meeting. Other related developments were as follows:

Second Plane. The Soviets July 11 said a U.S. reconnaissance plane missing since July 1 had been shot down that day by Soviet fighter plane over Soviet waters in the Arctic, near Archangel. Two of the crew were captured and four were missing. The Soviet note said the incident proved the U.S. was continuing its "aggressive" and "deliberately provocative" espionage flights over the Soviet Union despite President Eisenhower's "alleged order to discontinue American spying overflights" following the May U-2 incident. The note said the plane had taken off from a base in England, and warned that the United States' allies were "inviting a great danger" by permitting use of their bases.

In an official note the same day, the U.S. said the plane, an RB-47 reconnaissance bomber, had been "wantonly attacked over international waters" and the Moscow version of the incident was a "willful misrepresentation and misstatement of fact". The note said the plane was on "an entirely legitimate mission" of electromagnetic research as part of a series of flights "well known to the Soviet Government to have taken place over a period of more than 10 years" and its mission was "entirely different in character" from that of the U-2 spy plane shot down May 1. The aircraft was "at no time" closer than 30 miles to Soviet land territory, the note said.

Powers Trial. Francis Gary Powers, pilot of the U-2 plane shot down on May 1, went on trial in Moscow Aug. 17 on charges of espionage. He pleaded guilty to overflying the U.S.S.R. to take photos of the country on behalf of the U.S. Government, and on Aug. 19 was sentenced to 10 years' confinement -- the first three to be spent in prison, the remaining seven in Siberia. The Soviets did not, however, carry out earlier threats to press similar charges against the two crewmen of the RB-47 downed on July 1. But the fliers were still in Soviet custody, as of Dec. 15, 1960.

Khrushchev at UN. Premier Khrushchev arrived by boat in New York Sept. 19 as head of the Soviet delegation to the General Assembly meeting. President Eisenhower, addressing the Assembly first on Sept. 22, indirectly assailed the Soviet Union for its action in the Congo and for breaking off disarmament talks, and underscored U.S. support for the UN. The President did not meet with Khrushchev, who called Sept. 23 for major revisions in the UN structure, including the ousting of Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold and his replacement by a three-man directorate representing the West, socialist states and neutrals. Khrushchev also proposed: adoption of a declaration calling for "immediate" independence for all colonial and trust territories and elimination of "strongholds of colonialism in the shape of possessions and leasehold areas"; moving UN headquarters out of the United States to relieve the U.S. of its "burden"; a three-stage world disarmament program, and another summit conference "within a few months."

Campaign Charges. Throughout the 1960 Presidential campaign Vice President Nixon taxed Sen. Kennedy with having exhibited weakness in his May 18 remarks on the U-2 incident (see above). As Nixon put it in his July 28 acceptance speech: "It was not Mr. de Gaulle, or Mr. Macmillan, or Mr. Adenauer, but Mr. Kennedy who made the rash and impulsive suggestion that President Eisenhower should have apologized and sent regret to Mr. Khrushchev for the U-2 flight which the President had ordered to save our country from surprise attack."

During the second of their four televised debates Oct. 7, Sen. Kennedy said his May 18 remarks had been distorted by Mr. Nixon and other Republicans. What he had felt at the time, said Kennedy, was that "rather than tell the lie which we told, rather than indicate that the flights would continue,...it would have been far better then if we had expressed regrets if that would have saved the summit." Nixon, in rebuttal, said "I don't intend ever to express regrets to Mr. Khrushchev or anybody else if I am doing something that has the support of the Congress and that is right for the purpose of protecting the security of the United States."

SUBCOMMITTEE STUDIES POLICY MACHINERY

A Senate subcommittee in 1960 conducted a study of Executive Branch organization for meeting the national security and foreign policy planning requirements of the cold war era.

After holding hearings intermittently from February to July, the Senate Government Operations National Policy Machinery Subcommittee Nov. 22 issued the first of a series of projected staff reports based on the hearings.

The Subcommittee inquired into the workings of the National Security Council, the Strategic Air Command, Pentagon planning procedures, the Science Advisory Board, and State Department and Foreign Service advisory techniques. It also examined problems in policy coordination by the State and Defense Departments, the role of the Budget Bureau in policy decisions and problems of personnel management -- particularly rates of turnover in high-level, policy-making positions.

Among the proposals advanced in testimony before the Subcommittee were suggestions for the creation of a First Secretary of the Government, a Minister of Foreign Affairs, an Assistant Secretary of State for Military Affairs, a Cabinet-rank Department of Science. Other suggestions were for the reform of conflict-of-interest laws and reduction of inter- and intra-departmental advisory committees in favor of less formal inter-agency contacts and increased reliance on individual responsibility and authority within the various Departments.

Top officials of the Roosevelt, Truman and Eisenhower Administrations testified before the Subcommittee, as did other experts from the fields of government, business management and science.

Background

The Senate Government Operations Committee May 4, 1959 unanimously approved a proposal by Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D Wash.) to establish a Subcommittee on National Policy Machinery, to study the Nation's ability to plan and coordinate cold war strategy, and to make recommendations for remedial action to produce an "integrated national policy." Chairman John L. McClellan (D Ark.) named Jackson as chairman of the new group, and Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) and Karl Mundt (R S.D.) as its other members. Sens. Edmund S. Muskie (D Maine) and Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) were named to the Subcommittee in February 1960. A July 10, 1959 letter to Jackson from President Eisenhower gave assurances of White House cooperation in studies of the "procedures and machinery" of the National Security Council. Much of the testimony was given in executive session and was released after clearance by the White House.

An interim staff memorandum (S Rept 1026) released Dec. 3, 1959 set forth the following questions for consideration by the Subcommittee in 1960: Whether there should be a "super-Secretary-of-State" for over-all direction of foreign affairs and a Minister for Foreign Affairs to travel and represent the U.S. at the conference table; whether the Secretary of State should have more responsibility for the defense posture and defense budget; whether there should be an annual Presidential report to Congress on long-range foreign policy objectives and requirements; the advisability of establishing a new joint military-civilian career service.

In a related development, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Jan. 13, 1960 released a study prepared for it by the Brookings Institution, which said it was "most essential" that a "stronger Cabinet position responsible for unified direction of the mainstream of foreign policy and operations" be created. The study, "The Formulation and Administration of U.S. Foreign Policy" suggested the creation of a Department of Foreign Affairs with a "senior Secretary" as the President's chief foreign policy aide and three Cabinet-rank Secretaries of State, Foreign Economic Operations, and Information and Cultural Affairs.

Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Senate Government Operations, National Policy Machinery Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- Feb. 23 - July 1, 1960, intermittently, on the adequacy of Government organization for the cold war.

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 23 -- Robert A. Lovett, Republican Secretary of Defense and Under Secretary of State in the Truman Administration, said the U.S. was "in the early stages of a ruthless and lengthy period of competition" with the Communist system and recommended the following changes in the State and Defense Departments:

- The Secretary of State should relinquish global travels to a new Cabinet officer ("Minister of Foreign Affairs") who would be a full-time international negotiator.
- A sharp reduction in the number of committees within the Defense Department, which "have become positive menaces to the prompt and orderly conduct of business," sources of vacillating policies and dangerous security leaks.
- Civilian heads of the military departments should be non-political. High turnover in key civilian executive personnel could be reduced by revision of conflict of interest laws which deter recruitment.
- Downgrading the role of the Budget Bureau in determining the Defense and State Department budgets.

In secret testimony given the same day and released by the Subcommittee Feb. 28, Lovett criticized a possible tendency of Presidential aides to insulate their chief and not to inform him fully of "bothersome problems" and important policy alternatives.

Lovett said that the early National Security Council had been a "kind of court of domestic and foreign relations before which, with the President presiding, both (the State and Defense) Departments could present their views, debate the points, be subjected to cross-examination and so on." Citing this method as an insurance that the President would get all sides of a dispute "with a minimum of fuzzy compromise," he criticized any tendency to enlarge the Council to include agencies -- such as the Budget Bureau -- other than the State and Defense Departments. Such an enlargement, he said, "reduces the impact of both State and Defense on the expression of national needs." He objected to making the Budget Bureau a "decision maker", but said that it would normally be a "consultant and a participant".

Lovett urged that the NSC have "a hard core of trained, continuous public servants" and that full debate be given to all important issues.

DEFENSE POLICIES

Feb. 24 -- Robert C. Sprague, former co-chairman of the Gaither Committee, a group of leading private citizens appointed in 1957 to advise President Eisenhower on national security said the U.S. could and must increase its defense effort in order to survive. He recommended increases in defense outlays to implement a nationwide fallout shelter program, to protect Strategic Air Command bases and planes better from nuclear attack, for possible B52 bomber airborne alerts, and for increasing limited war capabilities. (1958 Almanac p. 672)

Sprague said many top personnel in the Executive Branch were poorly informed on important national security matters, and recommended they be given wider access to important classified documents. He said Congress should establish a non-partisan Joint National Security Committee to evaluate national security policy and make suggestions to the President.

The President and Secretary of Defense should be given more authority over the roles and missions of the services, Sprague said. He said the Secretary of Defense urgently needed a "command post" type staff, freed from particular service allegiance, and suggested National War College graduates for this role.

James P. Baxter 3rd, also formerly on the Gaither Committee, said he thought the SAC was "an adequate deterrent"; the U.S. should embark on a fall-out shelter program; the U.S. should improve its conventional military strength to wage limited wars.

Feb. 25 -- Thomas J. Watson Jr., president of International Business Machines Corp., said the U.S. must be willing to make any necessary sacrifices -- including increased taxes, to prevent unbalanced budgets -- to keep ahead of the Soviets in every sphere. Watson said the U.S. must find ways to attract the underdeveloped and uncommitted nations, and that in the interest of increasing trade, "we must continue to reduce our tariff barriers on a reciprocal basis."

April 25 -- Dr. James A. Perkins, vice president of the Carnegie Corp. and a member of the 1957 Gaither Committee, testified that "modern weapons and derived modern strategy have made largely obsolete existing organization in the Pentagon." Yet tradition and "plain inertia," he said, "have kept us from making the necessary hard decisions to really unify the separate services." Perkins also said that, although "foreign policy and military policy are inextricably linked," there was no evidence of this in State Department organization or procedures. He proposed, among other steps, appointment of an Assistant Secretary for Military Affairs.

In secret testimony released May 8, Dr. Perkins also said the procedures of the National Security Council were ponderous and led to a "strong inertia against initiating new policies."

April 26 -- Dr. James B. Fisk, president of Bell Telephone Laboratories and vice chairman of the President's Science Advisory Committee, termed "unrealistic" the proposal to establish a Department of Science. He suggested, instead, that the Science Advisory Board be given statutory authority.

Dr. William H. Pickering, director of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, California Institute of Technology, said it was essential that the U.S. develop "dynamic national goals that the citizenry can comprehend and are willing to support." No major changes in Government organization were needed, he said, but "the trend towards an increasing use of part-time committees of experts to make critical decisions should be reversed."

Dr. Ruben F. Mettler, executive vice president of Space Technology Laboratories, said too much energy was devoted to "building administrative mechanisms to root out 'duplication.'" He said that "significant duplication is actually relatively easy to find and to fix -- it is finding and fixing important errors of omission which is hard."

April 27 -- Dr. Eugene P. Wigner, Princeton physics professor, warned that unless the U.S. could more nearly parallel the "purposefulness" of the Soviets, "they will prevail". Directors of scientific and technical projects should be freed from constant investigation by Congress and others, he said, and "we should suppress programs without hesitation" if they lagged or lost their necessity in the face of changed circumstances.

PERSONNEL POLICIES

The Committee, in May 11-13 hearings, then turned to the problem of hiring and maintaining qualified persons in top Government posts. In an opening statement, Subcommittee Chairman Henry M. Jackson (D Wash.) said: "We have encountered disturbing difficulties in securing first-rate talent at the very time when national security calls for the country's 'best brains' to man key posts at home and abroad." Testimony:

May 11 -- Harold Boeschenstein, president of Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., member of the Department of Commerce Business Advisory Council and former vice-chairman of the War Production Board, said "the most serious obstacle" to bringing the best people into Government top level posts was "the vagueness of the laws and regulations dealing with conflicts of interest". He recommended action on the New York City Bar Assn.'s recommendations on conflict of interest laws. He said existing practices led to fear of legal reprisals and "grave personal sacrifices" to remove any basis for conflict of interest allegations. He said other obstacles were fear of "unwarranted abuse" in the form of partisan criticism by Congressional committees or "extravagant assertions by selfish pressure groups", insecurity of employment in top level posts and inadequate compensation.

Roger W. Jones, chairman of the U.S. Civil Service Commission, said turnover in policy making posts had risen to an "extremely dangerous" point. Jones recommended an internship program to train young businessmen for later top Government posts and higher salaries for Government employees, especially those in the middle echelons.

Bayless Manning, law professor at Yale University and staff director of the New York City Bar Assn.'s Special Committee on Conflict of Interest Laws, said low Government pay and divestiture requirements to avoid conflict of interest were major barriers to attracting the "middle executive" -- one with a family to support who could not afford a salary cut and no outside income. He said Government jobs should offer more challenge and carry more prestige.

May 12 -- Marion B. Folsom, director of Eastman Kodak Co. and former Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, said he did not feel businessmen's difficulties in Government posts were "as serious as often depicted". However, he said businessmen find it hard to adjust to the less flexible hiring, firing and promoting rules under civil service laws. He said Congressmen should be "a little more careful in criticising officials". He said businessmen are loath to lose promotion opportunities within their firms and give up employee benefits they enjoy there. Folsom said it was generally easier to obtain young lawyers and educators than businessmen for Government jobs.

He recommended: a central recruiting office in the White House, to improve on the current "hit or miss" system by gathering lists of competent men and training and advising new executives; easing and clarifying conflict of interest laws on the lines of the New York City Bar Assn. report; higher salaries for those just under department and agency heads (he said it would be difficult to raise salaries for top executives sufficiently to make up the difference between business and Government wages); and higher salaries for top civil service employees, to keep them from leaving Government jobs.

May 13 -- John J. Corson, former member of the Gaither Committee (1958 Almanac, p. 672) and director of the U.S. Employment Service, said top civil servants were "too-little-appreciated" but were limited in their capacity to compensate for the "here today, gone tomorrow" Presidential appointee. He said the Federal Government does "too little to broaden the career man's viewpoint and his experience". He recommended: a central recruiting office; more broadly trained career executives; more use of private citizens' committees as advisers; more "contracting out" with business and engineering firms and universities.

Roswell B. Perkins, chairman of the New York City Bar Assn.'s Special Committee on Conflict of Interest Laws explained the Assn.'s recommendations and urged their implementation.

KENNAN, HARRIMAN TESTIMONY

May 26 -- George F. Kennan, professor at the Institute for Advanced Studies in Princeton, N.J., former director of the Policy Planning Staff in the Truman Administration, and Ambassador to the Soviet Union in 1952, made these points:

- Performance of the United States as a world power had been hampered by "the cumbersomeness of our governmental machinery and by the inappropriateness of much of it to the purposes it is supposed to serve."
- There should be some one senior official in the Executive Branch, preferably the Secretary of State to act as the President's "principal executive agent" for all matters affecting the national security, international relations and military matters.
- The Policy Planning Staff established in 1947 by the late former Secretary of State George C. Marshall was "essentially sound"; its effectiveness would depend on staff members being "devoid of any other institutional loyalty or disciplinary relationship within the Government" and able to give opinions "with the most rigorous frankness and independence...."
- There was "real need from time to time" for the consultation of outside experts in policy planning, but consultants must contribute only information and opinion, not final policy decisions.
- The Foreign Service was overstaffed, included persons without broad educational backgrounds, and entrance examinations failed to test adequately the candidates' ability to think clearly; security controls were "poorly conceived, in some respects illogical, overly mechanical, humiliating, and in many instances discouraging;" various aspects of a Foreign Service officer's work, character and loyalty should not be separated in judging his work.
- The current system of advisory committees led to "endless compromises" and weak decisions and should be replaced by a system of "rigorous personal responsibility" with a chairman who would bear full responsibility for the final recommendation without being bound to achieve unanimity or majority approval.
- The State Department and Foreign Service seemed to be "seriously over-organized," mainly because of the committee system, "the contagion of 'bigness' in the governmental machinery generally," and a "tendency to complete separation of managerial and personnel functions from substantive ones". A smaller, more compact group of individuals, bound by "personal intimacy and confidence as well as by a long community of experience, could accomplish far more expeditiously and effectively what is now accomplished by a badly bloated apparatus."

Kennan also said summit meetings should occur only at the very end of negotiations for the purpose of signing agreements already reached, and that the United States "should look very carefully" before submitting the prestige of the President to another summit meeting. He said international affairs "probably have deteriorated" from the U.S. standpoint and "it looks to me as if we are going to be up against a stiffer attitude, a more ugly one than in past months."

June 2 -- Former New York Gov. W. Averell Harriman (D 1955-59), director of the Mutual Security Program 1951-53, former Ambassador to Russia and Great Britain and Secretary of Commerce in the Truman Administration, said the Budget Bureau and Treasury Department "now exert too strong an influence upon policy decisions" in national security and foreign policy fields.

Harriman also said: the Secretaries of State and Defense should have "constant personal communication between each other," but the Secretary of State must have the "senior position" in all foreign policy matters; a proposal for a Secretary of Foreign Affairs might help take some of the load off the Secretary of State; ambassadors-at-large should be appointed to coordinate the work of embassies in different areas; an ambassador must be willing to lose his job rather than tailor his recommendations for expediency; there no longer were any unimportant Foreign Service posts that could be used for political reward and ambassadors should be selected on the basis of their qualifications, not because of large political contributions; more use should be made of the U.S. representative to the United Nations; the head of the U.S. Information Agency should be chosen not for knowledge of publicity techniques but for his understanding of ideological cross-currents and problems of the world in general; conflict of interest laws were outmoded and should be updated; interdepartmental committees should be under constant review since many were "a waste of time."

ADMINISTRATION SPOKESMEN

June 10 -- Secretary of State Christian A. Herter said that in his opinion "good organization alone will not suffice for the solution of foreign affairs problems of the magnitude and complexity which confront us today." Herter said he placed "greater value on the human element -- on the devotion, ability and experience of the personnel" in principal Government agencies. Herter's testimony on the recent U-2 incident was in closed session, and his prepared text dealt mainly with answers to Subcommittee questions submitted to him in advance. Herter made these points:

- The relationship between the President and Secretary of State was "a very personal one" and could never be regulated from outside; any effort to do so "would hamper rather than enhance effective performance."
- The Secretary should have "a clear primacy in foreign relations and in all matters with a substantial effect upon foreign relations."
- The responsibilities of the State and Defense Departments were "correctly defined" currently, and more important than trying to further define their functions was a "continuing development of personnel in both departments...in the gray area where foreign policy and military policy come in contact or overlap."
- An exchange of personnel between the State and Defense Departments "would be worthwhile."
- It would not be desirable to create either a "super-Secretary of State" or a Minister of Foreign Affairs -- a "super-Secretary" might only find his burdens increased; a U.S. Foreign Minister would not have the same status of other nations' chief advisers, so his attendance at meetings would create problems for other Foreign Ministers.
- It would be desirable for the Foreign Ministers to curtail the occasions upon which they themselves attended meetings and place "greater reliance upon the normal mechanisms of diplomacy"; additionally, with some 85 nations dealing with each other, "we may have to dispense with some of the ways of protocol which we no longer have the time to afford."
- The Secretaries of State and Defense and Joint Chiefs had formed a "well-coordinated and smoothly-working team," and it would be a mistake to have a State Department officer sit with the Joint Chiefs, except possibly in an advisory capacity.
- Proposals for a joint career service would be "a rather drastic and administratively cumbersome approach."

June 13 -- Secretary of Defense Thomas S. Gates Jr., in prepared testimony, denied reports that the National Security Council was "somehow insulating the President from so-called 'hard facts' and 'hard decisions'." He said the President "participates actively in all Council meetings, the pros and cons of any issue are thoroughly and ably debated at the meetings, and the President himself makes the decisions." Gates said the Council was, in his opinion, "functioning effectively and efficiently." He also noted criticisms of the Joint Chiefs of Staff for failure to always reach unanimous agreement and said "senior military men of integrity do not compromise their views...they will have differences of opinion, and it is both natural and helpful to have them."

Gates said under a recently implemented procedure the Joint Chiefs met weekly with the Defense Secretary and Deputy Defense Secretary and that this both created a better basis for sound decisions between alternative courses and speeded action. Gates said since January 21, six specific issues, involving command arrangements, military planning, doctrine and the Military Assistance Program, had been decided -- five at one meeting and the sixth within a week after it.

Under questioning, Gates said he "would be in accord" with any "resolution or guidance that the Senate would give a new President that partisan politics should not be paramount or be decisive" in Defense Department appointments. He criticized conflict of interest laws and said only rarely could he induce the first man he tried to hire for an important civilian job to take it because of low pay and insecure tenure.

MILITARY POLICY, NSC

June 14 -- Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, retired Army Chief of Staff (1955-59) said the "total organizational structure," covering national policy, national strategy and military strategy, was "most visibly defective in its failure to provide clear guidance for the formulation of military strategy and for the generation of the military forces to implement that strategy." He criticized "rigid budget guidelines" on the armed forces and proposed a five-year program of defense budgeting, with the Defense Department receiving annually 10 percent of gross national income.

Taylor also proposed: a public statement of national military policy from the President to the Defense Department and military services; division of current functions of the Joint Chiefs of Staff between a Defense Chief of Staff and a Supreme Military Council; and both nuclear and non-nuclear forces.

Civilian political leaders, he said, did not give the military adequate guidance on diplomatic and political objectives, and there was a lack of "clearly defined national strategy," resulting in "vagueness of guidance (other than fiscal)" and an "obsolete method of budget making."

In executive session testimony made public June 28, Taylor also made the following points:

- Intra-Defense Department conflicts were often so compromised in reports to Defense heads that the men who had to make the decisions did not know that there was any conflict at all. An example was the four-year running dispute within the Pentagon over "massive retaliation" as against "flexible response". The issue was never laid before the National Security Council as such.
- The "big gathering of the NSC does not lend itself to really hard study and discussion."

There should be a permanent NSC staff to follow up and check on departments' execution of planning decision.

- There was not enough coordination between the State and Defense Departments -- the Secretary of State never was given a clear enough idea of specific defense capabilities.
- There should be closer coordination between the budget-making process and the NSC. The NSC takes the budget "pretty much on faith without very much question about strategic implications."

NITZE TESTIMONY

June 17 -- Paul H. Nitze, president of the Foreign Service Educational Foundation and former director of the State Department's Policy Planning Staff (1950-53), defined the enduring aim of U.S. foreign policy as "to maintain and enhance conditions in the world environment favorable to the survival, as political realities within our domain, of the precepts and values chosen and asserted in the foundation of the Nation."

"The task of seeing that the major policies are all of a piece and that taken together they are congruent with the strategic concept determined upon requires continuous superintendence which only the powers of the Presidential office can supply," Nitze said. "I do not mean just an office," he continued. "I mean also a man and his full attention. The appreciations necessary to the strategic conception which is the basic element of our policy cannot be achieved by intermittent attention. They cannot emerge from briefings designed to reduce all complexities to a nutshell. They cannot be arrived at through policy papers designed to cover up dilemmas and smooth over points of crux. The job cannot merely be distributed among subordinates."

Similarly, he said, execution of major policy "requires continuous superintendence that again must fall mainly to the President's responsibility." In this, however, the Secretary of State should act as the President's "vicar".... "No committee can perform this function for the President. No council can do it. The role must be assigned to an individual -- authorized, deputized and recognized for that purpose." To perform this function, the Secretary needed a staff "recruited, trained and organized to help him in this policy development and coordination function. This function is quite different from that of diplomacy for which most of the Foreign Service is now trained."

In secret testimony released July 9, Nitze said that while the National Security Council "can play an essential role", it seldom generated new policy ideas which were subsequently acted upon at the top level of government. He said that as early as 1953 NSC members were aware that the specific language of the Japanese peace treaty did not really reflect "the understanding between the parties" and needed to be revised. (See story p. 228)

Nitze said that it was difficult for NSC's Senior Staff to originate basic ideas of policy because of two conditions: NSC members viewed the NSC process as a negotiation in favor of the interests of the particular government departments involved; NSC members realized that a paper resulting from their negotiations would not be a final decision.

Nitze said that he believed it "proper" that both President Truman and President Eisenhower made decisions contrary to the advice of NSC members.

Under questioning by Subcommittee Chairman Henry M. Jackson (D Wash.), Nitze said the "prime prerequisite" under NSC machinery was that staff work should bring before the President and his policy-makers the critically important issues. He said although "there is not any mechanical reason" why the NSC could not produce new policy papers, in his view the main value of the NSC was that it was a secret forum "where you can really let your hair down to discuss what you really believe about things".

Moreover, according to Nitze, this forum could look ahead five to ten years, and "it is only if you take the required measures today in good time, when the problem is not there, or is not realized by the public to be there, that you will be in good shape at that later time to meet these upcoming problems".

RADFORD DEFENDS MILITARY

June 28 -- The Subcommittee released hitherto secret June 6 testimony by the former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Adm. Arthur W. Radford (1953-57).

Radford said there was "good liaison" between the State and Defense Departments. The military was meeting the need for training military officers in "politico-military affairs", he said, and there was no need for a special service of people trained in both military and international matters.

Radford said the U.S. could not make long-range plans for the cold war because the Communist "objective is to dominate the rest of the world" while "our objective is to live in peace and to be let alone.... Having that attitude...we are probably going to be caught off guard in many instances."

Gearing the military program to annual appropriations by Congress "was most inefficient" and "very difficult for our allies", Radford said.

He said that possibly the Joint Chiefs of Staff should not continue to be composed of the service chiefs: "It is a little bit too much to ask of a man to take off his service hat and come in that room and I don't think he does."

The military services were intended to be run by non-career civilians, Radford said, but "most of them don't stay there long enough to exercise effective control." These men should stay on the job a minimum of three or four years to be effective, he added.

Radford said the U.S. had "tremendous advantages of geography in the military picture.... We surround the Soviet bloc. We have the forward bases. We control the oceans of the world pretty well, and can maintain these forward bases. Nobody realizes better the difficulties of their position than the Russian military planners." Radford concluded by saying the National Security Council could not plan new military programs, could not duplicate State Department planning organization, could not review Defense Department planning -- "a lot they have to accept."

LUCE, ROCKEFELLER, TESTIFY

Henry R. Luce, editor of Time, Life and Fortune, said, "We as a people do not have a sufficiently clear concensus about our national purpose -- but we are proceeding rapidly to get it." He said the U.S. was not prepared for total war and particularly needed better civil defense.

July 1 -- New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R) said the U.S. Government "is still not geared to support the President in developing and executing integrated policy, thoughtfully and purposefully, either in the complex areas of national security and foreign policy, or in the equally complex area of domestic affairs" and recommended the following:

- Creation of the post of First Secretary of the Government to assist the President in national security and international affairs. The First Secretary should be appointed by the President subject to Senate confirmation. He should act for the President in international matters at the prime ministerial level, with the Secretary of State operating at the foreign ministerial level.
- Reorganization of defense planning and command as follows: The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff should be designated Principal Military Adviser to the Secretary of Defense and the President, and be responsible for development of over-all strategic doctrine; the staff of the Joint Chiefs should be organized on a unified basis under direct authority of the chairman; all officers above the rank of brigadier general or its equivalent should be designated officers of the armed forces of the U.S. -- not the individual service of their earlier careers -- and their promotion should be controlled by the Defense Department; the Secretary of Defense should be given full control over all military research, development and procurement; Defense Department funds should be appropriated to the Secretary, rather than to the individual military departments. The latter was suggested in a Rockefeller Brothers Fund report published Jan. 5, 1958 and proposed to Congress by President Eisenhower in 1958. After considerable controversy, it was omitted from the Defense Department Reorganization Act of 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 133)

● Creation of the post of Executive Assistant to the President and Director of the Office of Executive Management, to assist in planning and management in the sphere of domestic affairs. Under the new Office of Executive Management there should be five bureaus -- the Budget Bureau and four new bureaus to be created: Legislative Clearance and Coordination, to coordinate and develop legislation proposed by the Executive and the Administration's position on legislation pending in Congress; Program and Planning, to develop and coordinate recommendations concerning Executive Branch programs; Organization and Management, to coordinate and improve the functions of the Executive Branch, including accounting and statistical programs; and Personnel Management, to assist the President in Executive Branch personnel management.

● Consolidation of functions currently "scattered among various Government departments and agencies, particularly in such important fields as transportation and water resources".

● Renewal of the Government Reorganization Act of 1949, which expired in 1959, to allow the President to reorganize the Executive Branch as he saw fit, subject to a Congressional veto. The House in 1959 passed a bill (HR 5140) to extend the Act for two years, but the Senate did not vote on a similar bill (S 1474). (1949 Almanac p. 554; 1959 Almanac p. 308)

Other Developments

Following the U-2 incident, and summit conference collapse, the Subcommittee June 17 issued a unanimous brief report (S Rept 1750) listing seven "tested principles" of intelligence activity. The report concluded that "recent events have not altered the need for adherence to these principles. They have in fact attested to their wisdom." (For story of U-2 incident and list of Subcommittee's principles, see p. 713)

PERSONNEL RESOLUTION

The Senate July 2 by voice vote adopted a Subcommittee resolution (S Res 338) expressing the sense of the Senate that "individuals appointed to administrative and policy-making posts should be willing to serve for a period long enough to permit them to contribute effectively in their assigned tasks; and...that nominees appearing before its committees shall indicate their willingness" to serve "so long as the President desires."

Introduced June 20 by Jackson for himself and the other four Subcommittee members, S Res 338 was reported June 28 by the Government Operations Committee (S Rept 1753). The Committee report said there was wastefulness in the high turnover in Government personnel occupying important policy positions who often resign before or shortly after their training has made them valuable assets in their posts.

STAFF REPORT

The Subcommittee Nov. 22 released a staff report, "Super-Cabinet Officers and Superstaffs."

In a press release accompanying the report Jackson said there was "no place for a First Secretary of the Government" in the American system. Jackson also said he agreed with the study's conclusions that super-Cabinet officers and special Presidential staffs were not the right answers to the problems of organizing and coordinating Executive planning for national security.

One of a series of Subcommittee staff studies, the first report set as its purpose the examination of the "merit" of various proposals which "would tend to shift the center of gravity in policy development away from the great Departments...and closer toward the Presidential level." It asserted that creation of a First Secretary or of an expanded White House planning staff "would not ease" and would probably increase the President's burdens "in setting and maintaining our national course."

The report cited two basic reasons for opposing a First Secretaryship: first, that the creation of such an office would automatically lower the prestige of existing Cabinet posts; and second, that the holder of the position would be completely dependent on the President's "confidence" in him for the maintenance of his authority over Cabinet officials. If Cabinet jobs became less important, less talented and imaginative men would fill them, the report said. It said it doubted that anyone with as much work to do and as much power to exert as a proposed First Secretary could, in fact, maintain the "close, confidential, personal relationship with the President" that would be desirable. Creation of the post would carry the risk of the First Secretary becoming an independent force and arousing too many antagonisms from competing groups.

Criticizing related proposals to expand the responsibilities of the Vice President for coordinating foreign policy and national security, the staff study said that such a move would face the same problems as those created by a First Secretary. The plan would reduce the Secretary of State to the Vice President's assistant; it would set up a powerful office whose occupant would be free of Presidential control over tenure. The report also said there was a "serious" constitutional question about the degree to which the Vice President, as "an officer of the Legislative Branch by statute", could assume Executive authority.

The study specifically turned down a suggestion that a Presidential Staff Agency for National Security Affairs be created to replace the National Security Council staff, the Planning Board and the Operations Coordinating Board. A "superstaff" to assist either a First Secretary or a more powerful Vice President would encounter the dangers of "ivory tower" thinking, because of its lack of ties to the planning level in the various Departments, the report said.

Stating that there was a clear need for reform of the organization and procedures of executive policy formulation and coordination, the staff study listed the following "promising paths" toward change: more emphasis on individual executive authority and responsibility, rather than reliance on committees; a cut in the number of those attending National Security Council sessions and more flexible procedures in the NSC; enlargement not of the "command authority" but of the "scope of...guidance and influence" tendered by the Secretary of State; a "partnership" between the State and Defense Departments in preparing recommendations for the President, with the Secretary of Defense given more authority over Pentagon matters; use of the budget as a "management tool" and a planning aide, regarding budget targets as "policy instruments" instead of "fiscal instruments"; better, rather than more personnel on the President's staff; and elimination of legal, financial and partisan barriers to the use of top talents in the Government.

The report said the Subcommittee was planning subsequent staff studies to deal with these "paths" of reform in greater detail.

In a related development, Clark M. Clifford, who was acting as a liaison between President-designate Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) and the Eisenhower Administration, Nov. 21 announced that Kennedy had no plans "at present" to fill the $22,500-a-year post of Assistant to the President. The office was occupied during the Eisenhower Administration by Sherman Adams (1953-58) and by Gen. Wilton B. Persons. Kennedy also planned to trim the White House staff below its current level to give him "greater contact with the staff", Clifford said.

The Subcommittee Dec. 20 released a second staff report, "The National Security Council," which urged a "major overhaul" of the "NSC system" because the NSC's "overly crowded agenda, overly elaborate and stylized procedures" diminished its "real worth".

REPUBLICAN STUDY

A 15-member task force of the House Republican Policy Committee June 20 released results of a four-month study of American Strategy and Strength. The group's report was based on study papers prepared for the task force by a group of academic, professional and legislative experts in fields relating to the national security position of the U.S.

Headed by Rep. Gerald R. Ford Jr. (R Mich.), the task force set as its objective the delineation of national objectives to meet the "Communist total strategy" with positive policies rather than reliance on the goal of survival, which, the report said, "is not a strategy at all." Ford said the report was officially approved by Vice President Richard M. Nixon and was submitted to the 1960 Republican platform committee. The principal recommendations of the report appear in the box below.

Principal Recommendations in GOP Task Force Report

Vice Presidency "It is essential to continue and enlarge upon the policy of the present Administration in utilizing the position of Vice President as a vital post in national security policy making," the report said.

Priorities Review Board in White House The task force recommended a priorities review board as an adjunct to the National Security Council, acting as an advisory group to the President, the board to be created by administrative action (not by statute) and appointed by the President.

The study paper of Dr. William Y. Elliott proposed the board be charged solely with studying and reporting on priorities in the allocation of all national resources -- human, military, economic -- to maximize national security. Through a comparative analysis of inter-agency programs, the board would report to the NSC on priorities in resource allocation to aid the President and NSC in setting priority guidelines for the Bureau of the Budget. The board members, supported by a small high-calibre staff, would have no other governmental duties and not be delegates from other agencies -- though they would be men with wide experience in high level Government positions in several national security fields. Elliott recommended that board members be men "who are acceptable to both parties in Congress in the light of service to previous administrations and their independent attitude as public servants." The proposed board would replace the series of ad hoc committees such as the Draper Committee, Gaither Committee, etc., and, through continuity, be in a better position to win approval of their recommendations than were those committees. Elliott suggested the Vice President in the incoming administration as a useful person to preside over the proposed priorities review board.

Defense Organization The task force said it believed "a single Chief of Staff for all the services would overconcentrate power and decision making on the wrong level." It was recommended that the 1958 Reorganization Act "be allowed time to accomplish (its) objectives...before another major reorganization."

Experienced Appointees "The excellent performances of both Secretary of Defense Thomas S. Gates Jr. and Gordon Gray (Special Presidential Assistant for National Security Affairs) point out the advantage of extensive previous experience in national security matters, and set a precedent for future appointments."

Release of Information The report said responsibility must be clearly fixed for coordinating vital information from all departments and agencies bearing on national security or foreign policy and recommended that this mission "be carried out within the existing framework of the White House staff."

Congressional Policy Committees The report recommended implementation of the 1946 proposal by the Joint Committee on Reorganization of Congress for policy committees of both parties in both houses. The four policy committees could meet jointly with the President, particularly in times of crisis, "to facilitate the formulation and carrying out of national policy." The task force said such a group would not only afford a vehicle for responsible criticism of existing policies, but also help create "an ethical limitation, so that criticism and divisive influences would not destroy the strength of our international position," The report said "the recent U-2 incident, the summit crisis and Khrushchev's attempt to influence domestic politics refortify the recommendation to implement such legislation."

National Strategy Subcommittees The task force suggested creation of national strategy subcommittees within the four party policy committees. The subcommittees would consist of members of the party leadership and high-ranking members of various Congressional committees dealing with national security problems. "Dissenting reports of counterpart subcommittees could serve to deepen legitimate debate over real issues, and the joint reports could promote a sound, comprehensible public strategy," the task force said.

Regular Committee Hearings The report suggested consideration of streamlined and compact regular committee hearings to lessen the burden of repeated appearances by Administration witnesses.

CONTROLS SOUGHT FOR REGULATORY AGENCIES

The federal regulatory agencies, under investigation by Congress since 1957, in 1960 again found themselves in an uncomfortable Congressional spotlight. Earlier hearings had brought sensational disclosures ranging from the Mack-Whiteside and Adams-Goldfine cases in 1958 to the 1959-60 cases on rigged television quiz shows and payola scandals. (1959 Almanac p. 741)

Against this background, the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee began hearings in March 1960 on proposals (HR 4800, 6774) to curb improper influence in the regulatory agencies. Testimony disclosed more questionable practices and led to more hearings by the Committee's Special Legislative Oversight Subcommittee on off-the-record talks between members of the Federal Power Commission and gas industry representatives, including prominent New Deal attorney Thomas G. Corcoran.

The Subcommittee found that "improper approaches" had been made to the commissioners, and the full Committee approved a bill (HR 12731) to set ethical standards for the agencies. Although Congress did not act on this measure before adjournment, another set of Subcommittee hearings -- on deceptive broadcasting practices -- pointed up other regulatory agency shortcomings and led to passage of the Communications Act Amendments of 1960 (S 1898), which gave the agencies broader powers over the broadcasting industry. (See story p. 356)

CONNOLE DISPUTE

The Administration became involved in the investigations when President Eisenhower in May announced he would not reappoint FPC commissioner William R. Connole when his five-year term expired in June. Connole, who was involved in the gas industry hearings, had been regarded as the protector of consumer interests on the FPC because he advocated stricter regulation of natural gas prices. Mr. Eisenhower said, however, he would replace him because Connole was "identified with one particular point of view." The action brought strong protests from Connole supporters in Congress, and the President's nominee to replace him, Thomas J. Donegan, was not confirmed before adjournment. (See story p. 644)

The regulatory agencies about which Congress was concerned are: the FPC, Federal Trade Commission, Federal Communications Commission, Interstate Commerce Commission, Securities and Exchange Commission and Civil Aeronautics Board.

The Legislative Oversight Subcommittee, in a February interim report on its investigations (H Rept 1258), reviewed the fundamental problems of the agencies and said these were common to all of them: excessive delay and expense in procedures; inefficiencies; practices and conditions which were conducive to the use of improper ex parte pressures; overlapping of functions; reliance upon representations of the regulated industry without a genuine independent investigation by the agency itself; alleged discriminatory enforcement of the law and regulations, and failure to formulate or to publicize policy and interpretations so the regulated industry was kept timely informed of the rules of decision. The report dealt chiefly with the broadcasting industry, and its legislative recommendations were for this field. (See story, p. 356)

LEGISLATIVE HEARINGS

Major Proposals

The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee March 15 began hearings on two bills to curb improper influence and conduct in the regulatory agencies. Both bills, HR 4800, which was drafted by the Subcommittee, and HR 6774, proposed by the American Bar Assn., were controversial even though they did not propose to alter the basic organization or powers of the major agencies.

As introduced in February 1959 by Rep. Oren Harris (D Ark.), chairman of the Committee and its investigating Subcommittee, HR 4800 proposed to:

- Authorize the six regulatory agencies to take action against (1) anyone using "improper" means to influence an agency decision "in any proceeding or matter"; (2) any agency member or employee who accepts anything of value from persons with "a pecuniary interest" in pending matters, or who engages in other improper conduct; and (3) any agency member who appears before the agency in any matter within two years of leaving the agency, or any agency employee who so appears in any matter with which he was connected while employed.
- Make it a crime to "communicate, orally or by writing, with any member or employee of the Commission concerning the issues, merits, or disposition of any proceeding before the Commission, with the intention that any participant or participants in such proceeding will not receive knowledge of such communication."
- Make it a crime to fail to place all communications concerning a proceeding in the public file, including summaries of telephone calls and conversations, or to remove any such matter from the public file.
- Make it a crime for anyone appearing in a representative capacity in any proceeding to fail to file notice of his appearance in advance.

Maximum penalties for "willfully and knowingly" violating these provisions would be one year in jail and/or a $10,000 fine.

Other provisions of HR 4800 would authorize the President to remove any agency member "for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office, but for no other cause"; authorize the agencies to choose their own chairmen for terms of no more than three years; and require each agency to designate a member "to prepare or to personally direct the preparation, in writing, of a statement of the reasons or basis" for each agency decision.

HR 6774, the ABA's bill, also was introduced by Harris, on April 29, 1959. It was concerned solely with attempts to influence agency decisions through ex parte communications. The bill's key provisions would:

- Provide that "in agency hearing proceedings which are subject to notice and opportunity for hearing and required by law to be based upon a hearing record, the agency's determination and decision shall be based solely and exclusively upon the issues, pleadings, evidence, and contentions of record in the proceedings."
- Make it unlawful for any agency member or hearing examiner to receive any ex parte communication regarding a pending matter without making it a matter of record with notice to all parties.

● Make it unlawful for anyone "with intent to influence the consideration or decision of a proceeding" to communicate ex parte with any agency member or hearing examiner concerning a pending matter.

Willful violations would be subject to penalties of one year in jail and/or a $10,000 fine.

Objections

The matters covered in HR 4800 and HR 6774 were fully explored, along with many other regulatory agency problems, when the Subcommittee on Legislative Oversight held a series of panel discussions with lawyers and agency personnel in November 1958 and June 1959. In addition, the provisions of HR 6774 were scrutinized during hearings in July and November 1959 on an identical bill (S 2374) before the Administrative Practice and Procedure Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

These hearings revealed that, although there was little dissent regarding the need to prevent improper conduct and ex parte pressures in agency proceedings, there was great concern as to where the line should be drawn. The reason for this concern lies in the multiple responsibilities of the agencies. The FCC, for example, is charged with promoting the communications industry and with policing it, with laying down broad rules of general applicability and adjudicating particular claims. In their executive and legislative capacities, the regulatory agencies must remain in constant and close contact with the industries they regulate. Yet to do so opens the doors to impropriety in what remain their strictly judicial functions.

A key objection voiced against HR 6774 concerned its definition of proceedings to which the prohibitions against ex parte communications would apply. According to the bill's critics, it would apply to rule-making as well as adjudicatory proceedings, although the two are subject to different rules under the Administrative Procedure Act of 1946. The effect, it was argued, would be to force the agencies to adhere to judicial standards in carrying out their essentially legislative function of rule-making. This would further encumber the already cumbersome administrative process.

Agency personnel also objected to provisions, contained in both bills, requiring that summaries of all oral communications be placed in the record. According to CAB General Counsel Franklin M. Stone, this would place a "staggering" burden on agency staffs.

The provision in HR 4800 requiring each agency decision to be signed by one member was a round-about answer to the complaint, voiced particularly against FCC and CAB, that the Commission or Board often ignores the initial decisions of its hearing examiners, announces a different and anonymous decision, and then turns the cases over to staff "opinion writers" to draw up the formal decisions. Although there appeared to be no major objection to the requirement in HR 4800, its significance as a useful reform was disputed.

Testimony

TESTIMONY -- March 15 -- Frederick W. Ford, new chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, said FCC already had sufficient authority to regulate the broadcasting industry effectively.

March 16 -- Ford said legislative proposals to outlaw off-the-record communications between agency officials and industry members would prevent the FCC from getting information necessary for establishing new regulations or deciding whether or not a license should be granted. He said the "Commission was in...accord" with proposals which would establish a more complete code of ethics for agency employees.

March 18 -- Sen. William Proxmire (D Wis.) said the bills should be strengthened to include absolute prohibitions to federal officials, including members of Congress, against accepting favors from persons who dealt with the Government. He said that loopholes in the two proposals would have permitted former Federal Communications Commission Chairman John C. Doerfer to accept the hospitality of George B. Storer, owner of a member of radio and television stations, because Storer had no cases pending before the FCC. (For Doerfer resignation, see story p. 356)

March 22 -- FCC Chairman Frederick W. Ford said it would be difficult under the proposed laws to determine what was "unusual" hospitality, and added that it was up to Congress to make the distinction.

March 23 -- Federal Power Commission Chairman Jerome K. Kuykendall said spokesmen for the Midwestern Gas Transmission Co. had talked to him and other FPC commissioners about an adjustment in the company's return rate, and that just before an FPC announcement of the adjustment he had had an off-the-record telephone conversation with one of the firm's spokesmen (identified later as former New Deal attorney Thomas G. Corcoran). He said, however, that the phone call had nothing to do with the fact the adjusted rate was higher than that recommended by the FPC staff. He also said he made no record of the phone call nor discussed it with anyone else.

(The Legislative Oversight Subcommittee March 24 said hearings on these off-the-record discussions would be held later in the session. Kuykendall March 31 said the FPC would "welcome" the inquiry. He said Corcoran had asked for a 7 percent rate of return for the company's pipeline investment, that the FPC staff, at Kuykendall's request, had drafted an opinion recommending a 6-1/4 percent rate and termed 7 percent excessive, but that the FPC had decided not to fix a definite rate at the time because of uncertainty of the financing for the 506-mile pipeline. He said "if there is anybody in the world who would not have any influence on me, it is Tommy Corcoran," and that "this whole thing wouldn't have come about if I hadn't asked for the staff's position.")

March 25 -- Warren E. Baker, Federal Communications Bar Assn., said his group favored HR 6774, curbing ex parte communications in quasi-judicial matters before the regulatory agencies. He said HR 4800 took in rule-making procedures as well and was so broad that it might cover innocent acts.

March 29 -- Chan Gurney, vice chairman, Civil Aeronautics Board, said he "vehemently" disagreed with a 1959 statement by former CAB member Louis J. Hector that CAB practices made an "ideal breeding ground for... improper influence".

March 30 -- Edward N. Gadsby, chairman, Securities and Exchange Commission, said his agency had operated with strict impartiality, and any new legislation should not be such as to create unnecessary hardships or interfere with the efficient functioning.

March 31 -- Earl W. Kintner, chairman, Federal Trade Commission, said both HR 4800 and 6774 contained a number of "objectionable features".

April 1 -- Abe McGregor Goff, member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, said the commissioners had been "conscious for a long while of the constant criticism" of the ICC and became convinced in mid-1959 that a "constructive study" was needed of agency practices and procedures. He said an 18-member advisory board, including representatives of all modes of transportation, had been formed and held a two-day meeting in January. Another meeting was scheduled for May, Goff said.

Robert W. Ginnane, ICC general counsel, said after the advisory group submitted a final report the ICC would try to implement constructive recommendations and if necessary seek legislation.

April 4 -- Donald C. Beelar and Bryce Rea Jr., American Bar Assn., said the ABA believed the regulatory agencies were "ill advised in not seeking the cooperation of Congress" to deal with the problem of influence. They said anti-influence legislation should bar ex parte communications from agencies' proceedings that were legally subject to open hearings but should not place curbs on agency members' other activities.

Bill Reported

The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee July 1 reported a clean bill (HR 12731 -- H Rept 2070) setting ethical standards for the regulatory agencies, requiring the establishment of proper procedures by the agencies and providing criminal penalties for improper off-the-record communications in agency proceedings. The bill was unanimously approved by the Committee after it rejected a proposal by some members that Congressmen be exempted from its provisions. The bill covered the six major regulatory agencies -- FCC, FTC, FPC, ICC, CAB and SEC. The bill did not reach the floor during the remainder of the 86th Congress.

In a declaration of policy, the bill said it was "vitally important in the public interest to strengthen the independence and effectiveness" of the agencies and to promote their "efficient, fair, and independent operation." It termed "improper" attempts by any person to influence or attempt to influence any agency vote, decision or other action through "secret and devious methods" including pressure, spreading of false information, or pecuniary or other inducements. It also deemed improper any of the following actions by agency personnel: transactions for profit with anyone having a pecuniary interest in a pending proceeding; accepting or soliciting any "money, loan, service, employment or thing of value" from anyone with pending agency business; use of confidential information for personal profit; failure to restrict personal business affairs to avoid conflicts of interest, and any official act when there was a personal interest that might inhibit unbiased judgment.

The bill provided that each agency should establish procedures for considering and acting on complaints relating to any of these "improper" actions.

The bill would make the agencies responsible for determining and giving public notice of all on-the-record hearings, and ban any unofficial communication on the subject of the hearing after that notification. In the event any written ex parte communication were made, the agency involved would be required to notify the agency's secretary, and send a written statement of the circumstances. Both the communication and statement would be placed in the public file and all parties in the proceedings would be notified.

The bill would leave to the agency's discretion whether an ex parte approach was grounds for disqualification of the party involved.

Violations of the bill's ban on ex parte communications would be subject to maximum penalties of one year in prison or a fine of $10,000, or both.

In prescribing proper procedures, the bill defined an "on-the-record proceeding" as one in which agency action was required by law or agency rule to be based on the record of an agency hearing, but limited it to a time beginning with notice of hearing or an earlier time the agency designated as appropriate. Off-the-record (ex-parte) communications were defined as those with respect to a proceeding or the consideration or decision of a proceeding wherein reasonable notice was not given in advance of the communication to all interested parties. The Committee amended this definition to exempt any request for information on the status of a proceeding.

The Committee, in spelling out those covered by the bill, defined an "agency employee involved in the decisional process" as any employee subject to the immediate supervision of a member of the agency or any employee charged with preparing decisions on proceedings. The report said the Committee was aware of the "danger" of excluding other employees because "the door may be left open for abuses and evasions," but felt "it would be unwise to enact legislation which might in effect put the agencies in a strait jacket," and expected the agencies themselves to fashion their own procedures to prevent "backdoor" influences.

The report noted that there were no criminal penalties provided in cases of improper influence "by secret and devious methods," but said such improprieties could be handled through a provision requiring each agency to prescribe procedures in such cases. Criminal penalties were provided, however, in cases of either oral or written ex-parte communications in on-the-record proceedings, which the report said were, "broadly speaking," those which had "some or all of the 'essential elements of contested litigation'."

The bill also provided that any member of an agency could be removed by the President for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office, but for no other cause. The report said inefficiency had not been included as a basis for removal because the term was "too vague and indefinite."

The Committee added a section to the bill to provide that any written request for information on the status of an on-the-record proceeding was to be "promptly delivered" to the agency secretary for an appropriate reply. The request also would be placed in the public file, together with a copy of any reply. All other written requests for similar information received by the secretary would go into the file, and no document could be removed except for official purposes.

The bill also strengthened "separation of functions" provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act by requiring that in any on-the-record proceeding -- either adjudication or rule-making -- staff members engaged in any investigation or prosecution activities should not communicate ex-parte with Commission members or other licenses, rates, or public utilities facilities or practices.

Agencies Under Scrutiny

FPC Chairman Kuykendall's March 23 testimony during Committee legislative hearings concerning his contacts with gas industry representatives led not only to Legislative Oversight Subcommittee hearings (see below) on such off-the-record talks but to acknowledgements and disclosures of other industry-regulatory agency relationships. Congressional tempers grew increasingly short in all matters affecting the agencies. In the interim between the Committee legislative hearings and the May 10 opening of the Subcommittee inquiry these were the developments:

April 4 -- Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas), a member of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, said it would be up to Timothy J. Murphy (D Mass.) to prove he was a Democrat when his March 14 nomination to a Democratic vacancy on the Interstate Commerce Commission was considered by the Committee. Murphy, who seconded the nomination of Vice President Richard M. Nixon at the 1956 GOP National Convention, May 9 testified that as of the present he would be inclined to vote for Nixon for President "on the basis of personal friendship," and that he had known him since they served together in the Navy in 1942, but he still considered himself a Democrat. The Committee approved Murphy's nomination by an 11-5 vote June 1 and reported it (Exec Rept 9) June 22 but it never reached the floor and Murphy was not confirmed in 1960. (For story on nominations see p. 644)

April 13 -- Kuykendall disclosed he had checked with Chairman Harris before he and two colleagues March 18 flew to Louisiana and back in a private plane owned by United Gas Pipeline Co. to attend the funeral of FPC Commissioner John B. Hussey. The company had $45 million in rate increase applications pending before the agency. Kuykendall said he called Harris because he was aware the flight might be open to criticism, but after "talking around the Commission" he believed the private flight was the only way to get to the funeral on time. Harris told newsmen, "I told him to go ahead. I think it was a perfectly proper thing to do and anyone who makes anything out of this is pretty small." Kuykendall April 26 said he had taken five free airline trips since he took office in 1953, but all of them were proper and justifiable and he had "never taken any junkets in airplanes owned by the natural gas industry." He identified the five flights as: two to Louisiana to attend funerals of FPC members, two inspection trips and one flight to Atlantic City.

Aptil 14 -- Kuykendall told newsmen Thomas G. Corcoran might have held talks with him in 1959 on another case involving the same company, Midwestern Gas Transmission Co., but he had "no recollection" of any conversation. On April 15 he said he also might have held talks with Corcoran in a 1958 case involving the company but he was not certain about it. He said such off-the-record contacts were customary in uncontested proceedings and when the FPC was not acting in a judicial capacity.

May 2 -- An annual report filed with the FPC by the Tennessee Gas Transmission Corp., the company Corcoran represented in the gas rate case, showed he received $102,203 in 1959 from the firm and a subsidiary, Midwestern Gas Transmission Co. The total brought to more than $408,110 the amount paid Corcoran in the past six years by the two companies, although he did not appear as attorney of record in company cases before the FPC in that time.

President Eisenhower nominated Thomas J. Donegan of New York, a former agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation and when nominated a member of the Subversive Activities Control Board, to succeed William R. Connole on the FPC. Connole's five-year term was to expire June 22 and various public officials, state regulatory commissioners and Members of Congress had urged his reappointment. The President, who appointed Connole, told his April 27 news conference: "I think I can get a better man, and that's all."

The President at the same time nominated Paul A. Sweeney, Justice Department attorney and a Democrat, to fill the unexpired FPC term, until June 22, 1963, of the late John B. Hussey. In announcing the nominations, White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said Mr. Eisenhower was abandoning the practice of naming specific representatives of consumer, oil or natural gas interest groups. Hagerty said: "The President does not think this is the way it should be done, although it has been the practice in the past."

May 3 -- Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.) said he would "do all I can to see that the record is made clear" on why Connole was not reappointed and in a May 4 speech on the Senate floor urged delaying confirmation of Donegan until the President gave a "full explanation of his action. Sen. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) May 4 said he thought Donegan and Sweeney both were actually selected by Vice President Richard M. Nixon and Attorney General William P. Rogers. Sen. William Proxmire (D Wis.) May 3 also called for an explanation of the action.

May 14 -- Dodd released a May 9 letter from President Eisenhower in which the President said he was replacing Connole on the FPC because he was "identified with one particular point of view." Mr. Eisenhower said Connole had "served faithfully and diligently," but "I concluded some time ago that the purpose of these agencies would best be served if nominees...did not become identified as representing any point of view narrower than the broad public interest."

(Neither Donegan nor Sweeney was confirmed in 1960, see p. 644)

GAS INDUSTRY HEARINGS

The Legislative Oversight Subcommittee May 10 began hearings on off-the-record talks between FPC members and gas industry representatives.

TESTIMONY -- May 10 -- FPC Chairman Kuykendall said Thomas G. Corcoran, prominent New Deal attorney, visited him once and telephoned him once in November 1959 shortly before the FPC gave permission for the importation of gas from Canada by the Midwestern Gas Transmission Co., which Corcoran represented. He said he regarded the phone call as improper because Corcoran discussed the rate of return sought by the company but there was no discussion of merits of the case in the office visit. Kuykendall said he reported Corcoran's contacts to the Subcommittee after a trade magazine article publicized them and not earlier because it would have seemed "like I was gunning for Mr. Corcoran because he was of the opposite political party." He said he was "not influenced in any way whatsoever" by the talks, and that Corcoran also had contacted FPC Commissioners Arthur S. Kline and William R. Connole.

Kuykendall said many FPC-company discussions on financing plans and proposed tariff changes were "necessary and proper," but discussing merits of cases was not regarded as proper. In answer to questioning, he said it was true he and Kline had persuaded the Colorado Public Utilities Commission to agree to a $38.5 million rebate on temporary rate increases charged by the Colorado Interstate Gas Co., instead of the $50 million ordered by an FPC examiner or the $42 million compromise proposed by the FPC staff. He said the company's president, William E. Mueller, had visited him and said the ordered rebate would be financially disastrous to the company. Mueller urged an early hearing on the matter, but did not discuss the merits of the case, Kuykendall said. He said he believed Mueller also saw other FPC members, and that he felt the settlement was in the public interest since it preserved the firm's financial soundness and helped clear the crowded FPC docket.

Kuykendall said it was true that, for the gas industry as a whole, the FPC had permitted about $600 million in termporary rate increases pending FPC review, but although it was "a deplorable situation" it was unavoidable because of the FPC's backlog of work.

May 11 -- Questioning centered on legal expenses reported by gas pipeline companies, and FPC general counsel Willard W. Gatchell said "we assume that the management has made only those expenditures which in their judgment are proper and reasonable", but that the FPC did not "go into any individual fees".

Kuykendall said some of the legal charges were figured in the rate base established for natural gas consumers.

Subcommittee counsel Robert W. Lishman introduced records of eight gas companies showing millions of dollars in payments to lawyers between 1953 and 1959 and including a $311,000 fee paid Corcoran by Tennessee Gas Transmission Co., Midwestern's parent company, for 1955-59 services.

May 12 -- Kuykendall was questioned on the status of the Midwestern gas rate case. He said the FPC had left open the rate of return on the investment in the Canadian pipeline because financing costs were abnormally high at the time, the agency had precedent for delaying rate determinations until a company built its plant, and if Midwestern had not obtained operating rights by Nov. 1, 1959, it would have had to begin new transactions for the pipeline. (The FPC staff had recommended a 6-1/4 percent rate and the company had urged a 7 percent rate.)

May 13 -- Commissioner Kline said Corcoran visited his office eight times during a 14-month period in which Midwestern Gas Transmission Co., which he represented, had a pipeline rate case before the FPC. He said, however, that Corcoran "did not specifically mention any rate of return or any other issue in the case at any time." Kline said he had insisted on fixing a definite rate of return on Midwestern's earnings. Although the rate subsequently was left open by unanimous vote of the FPC, Kline said he did not change his vote as a result of Corcoran's visits.

Kline acknowledged private talks in his office with gas company attorneys and executives, said he was visited 13 times in about 18 months by one former FPC commissioner now representing gas companies, but held that he could recall only two instances when industry representatives touched on merits of a case and said that both times he had silenced them.

May 16 -- FPC Commissioner William R. Connole said his position on the Midwestern rate case was "firm" at least three days before Corcoran visited him in his office in October 1959 and "remained unchanged."

FPC Commissioner Frederick Stueck said he was out of town when Corcoran called on the other commissioners and had not been contacted by him. He said he had met and talked briefly with N.W. Freeman, Midwestern president, while he was in Phoenix, Ariz., that Freeman expressed hope for issuance of an "acceptable" FPC ruling before November 1 and that "I smiled and moved on".

May 17 -- The Subcommittee staff submitted a memorandum on visitors listed in Stueck's desk calendar, including Clark M. Clifford, formerly counsel to President Truman and a representative of the Phillips Petroleum Co.; Thomas E. Stephens, President Eisenhower's appointments secretary, and Donald E. Van Koughnet, an attorney identified as a partner of Stephens. Stueck said Clifford never had visited him in his office, that he was an old friend and their meetings were for lunch and purely social. He said none of his visitors discussed "pending litigated matters."

Under questioning, Stueck said that in 1957 he and the late FPC Commissioner Seaborn Digby called on former Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. to urge him to hold up reportedly imminent antitrust actions against three gas companies and their officials pending a more thorough investigation. Stueck said there were some apparent misunderstandings in the case.

CORCORAN TESTIMONY

May 18 -- Corcoran said his conversations with FPC Chairman Jerome K. Kuykendall and Commissioners Kline and Connole were "procedural", designed to "expedite" the Midwestern case and "perfectly proper". He said on instructions from Gardiner Symonds, Midwestern's board chairman, he emphasized in his talks that Symonds was "dead serious" about refusing to accept a rate below 7 percent and that he specifically mentioned "that sacred number seven" only in an Oct. 28, 1959 phone call to Kuykendall, but discussed it indirectly with the others. He said it was understandable that Kuykendall might have misunderstood his purpose because "I talked so fast". (The FPC Oct. 31, 1959 issued a certificate leaving the rate open.)

Corcoran said his law firm received a monthly retainer of $5,000 from Midwestern and its parent company, Tennessee Gas Transmission Co., that "the young people do the bulk of the work and I jump on an airplane and jump from one hot spot to another." His FPC calls "coincided with moments of crisis", Corcoran said, and there was nothing secret about them since "I walked down the corridors of that commission in broad daylight with a brass band behind me."

May 19 -- Corcoran said his private talks with FPC commissioners on a pending gas pipeline rate case had been proper because the FPC "is not a court of law."

Subcommittee member John B. Bennett (R Mich.) said Gardiner Symonds, board chairman of Midwestern Gas Transmission Co., was guilty of "a plain out-and-out threat on his part to bulldoze the commission" when he instructed Corcoran to tell the commissioners he would not accept any rate of return on the pipeline below 7 percent.

May 20 -- N.W. Freeman, president of Midwestern, said he had talked privately with all members of the FPC during the past 12 or 13 years, that both Midwestern and its parent company, Tennessee Gas Transmission Co., had cases pending before the FPC at all times during that period and that since other gas companies also had business pending before the agency during that time, "if I had not contacted the commissioners...I question whether Tennessee would be where it is today."

Freeman said he had relayed to Corcoran instructions by Symonds to press for a rate decision on the pipeline case and told Corcoran to "reemphasize" Symonds' position. He said the contacts were made "out of an abundance of caution" so the commissioners would realize the seriousness of a Nov. 1, 1959 deadline for action on the pipeline contract.

May 23 -- Symonds said he had been contacting FPC commissioners for about 15 years, that he would prefer a system under which such private pleadings would be unnecessary, but that "ex parte" contacts were needed because under existing circumstances the FPC was so slow and its staff argued privately against gas companies. "It is common knowledge that everyone talks to the Commission when they can get an audience," Symonds said.

Subcommittee member John James Flynt Jr. (D Ga.) supported Symonds' viewpoint, said his action "was not only proper but you had a duty to your stockholders." Subcommittee Chairman Oren Harris (D Ark.) said, however, that if such activity was permitted by the law, "it is our duty to do something about it."

May 24 -- Melwood W. Van Scoyoc, a utility consultant and former FPC staff member, was questioned on a refund case involving the Colorado Interstate Gas Co., in which he represented the city and county of Denver. He said one or more FPC commissioners apparently participated in negotiations which led to the company refunding about $38.5 million in temporary rate increases instead of the $50 million refund recommended by an FPC examiner.

Harris, concluding the hearings, said the inquiry proved improper approaches had been made to the commissioners. He said the Subcommittee staff would consider possible corrective legislation and also search for means to clear up the FPC backlog of cases.

Other Developments

AGENCY TERMS EXTENDED

With a view toward smoothing the transitional periods when there were changes in regulatory agency memberships, Congress June 30 approved a bill (S 1965) to allow members of the FPC, FCC and SEC to serve in office until their successors were appointed and confirmed by the Senate. Similar provisions had been in effect for members of the FTC, ICC and CAB. The bill was passed by the Senate July 29, 1959, by the House June 24, 1960, with an amendment providing that agency members could not serve beyond the end of the Congress in which their term expired. The Senate agreed to the amendment June 30 and the bill was signed into law July 12 (PL 86-619).

TELEVISION AWARD CRITICIZED

The New York Herald Tribune news service said in a June 19 story that the Federal Communications Commission had tentatively awarded a license for television Channel 10 in Albany, N.Y., to a firm in which five Congressmen were minority stockholders. The story said the FCC took a "preliminary" step toward granting the license to Capital Cities Television Corp. on the basis of an Aug. 11, 1959 decision by an FCC examiner that the company had "an edge" over a rival applicant in the matter of "civic participation" because five Members of the House of Representatives were stockholders. Civic participation is one of the FCC yardsticks in deciding contested cases, and the examiner said election to Congress denoted "an ability to discern and be responsible to the interests of the people" of a community.

The story said the five Congressmen owned about 6 percent of the company's total stock issue, and it identified them as: Reps. Dean P. Taylor (R N.Y.), a former GOP national committeeman; Leo W. O'Brien (D N.Y.), a member of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee which drafts legislation affecting the FCC; Eugene J. Keogh (D N.Y.); James J. Delaney (D N.Y.), and Peter W. Rodino Jr. (D N.J.). The company had more than 50 stockholders, the story said.

Sen. William Proxmire (D Wis.) June 20 told the Senate the FCC action was "political payola at its worst," and it would be just as logical for the agency to adopt a policy of "taking the gravy themselves" by giving preference to firms in which FCC members held stock.

An FCC spokesman Oct. 27 said the agency Aug. 2 had authorized Capital Cities to operate "under program tests," and that the station currently was located in Vail Mills, N.Y. (WTEN).

EISENHOWER, KENNEDY ORDER STUDIES

President Eisenhower Aug. 29 appointed Judge Elijah B. Prettyman of the U.S. Court of Appeals to serve as temporary chairman of a new White House conference to study procedures of federal administrative agencies. Mr. Eisenhower said the chairmen of the "big six" regulatory agencies had proposed the conference Aug. 25.

President-elect John F. Kennedy Nov. 10 announced that he had asked James M. Landis, former dean of the Harvard Law School, "to undertake a study in an area of long concern to us both, a study of the federal regulatory agencies with a view to maximizing the effective dispatch of their business." Kennedy said Landis had agreed to submit a preliminary report by mid-December.

WHITESIDE-GOLDFINE CASES

A federal court jury in Washington Oct. 13 acquitted Thurman A. Whiteside, Miami lawyer, of charges he had conspired with former FCC Commissioner Richard A. Mack in 1957 to swing a four-way contest for Miami TV Channel 10 to Public Service Television, Inc., a National Airlines subsidiary. He also was acquitted of a charge he had tried to influence Mack while the case was before the FCC. A joint trial of the two men in 1959 resulted in a deadlocked jury, and Mack was unable to stand trial with Whiteside in 1960 because of illness. (1959 Almanac p.743)

In Boston, Mass., Federal Judge George C. Sweeney Oct. 12 ruled industrialist Bernard Goldfine mentally incompetent to stand trial at that time on charges of corporate income tax evasion and ordered him committed for hospital treatment. Goldfine, who figured prominently in 1958 Congressional hearings on regulatory agencies, Oct. 3 ended a 90-day sentence for contempt of court.

Goldfine's secretary, Miss Mildred Paperman, Oct. 31 pleaded guilty in Boston to a federal indictment charging her with personal income tax evasion and was fined $12,500 by Judge Sweeney, who also imposed and suspended a four-month jail sentence and placed her on two-years probation. Miss Paperman also pleaded guilty, as co-defendant with Goldfine in the corporate income tax evasion case, but sentence was deferred pending disposition of the indictments against Goldfine.

NATION'S MILITARY AIRLIFT CAPACITY INVESTIGATED

Adequacy of the Nation's strategic airlift capability in the event of general or limited war was investigated in hearings by the House Armed Services Special National Military Airlift Subcommittee in March, April and May 1960 and was considered in various Department of Defense reports throughout the year. As a result of the testimony developed, Rep. L. Mendel Rivers (D S.C.), chairman of the Subcommittee, urged and won Congressional approval for additional 1961 appropriations for aircraft procurement and development. In a May 2 report, the Subcommittee concluded that "strategic airlift capability to support a general war without warning is seriously inadequate."

There was general agreement between Congress and the Pentagon that airlift capabilities were seriously deficient and had to be modernized through a program of new military procurement as well as an expansion of civil carrier participation in emergency airlift plans. There was also agreement that some transport functions had to be performed by civilian carriers in order to increase their readiness for airlift support. Pressure in the same direction came from the civilian carriers themselves, who complained that the Military Air Transport Service (MATS) was carrying cargo which could be transported commercially.

Still undecided at the end of the year was the question of how many functions performed by MATS could be transferred to civil airlines without cutting into the training time and fleet inventory needed by MATS for performance of its anticipated wartime mission. Also unresolved were questions of government authority over the civilian air cargo carriers and of financing new jet cargo planes.

Background

The Joint Chiefs of Staff Oct. 15, 1959 established -- in a classified report -- requirements for airlift in support of general war. They based their requirements on three assumed situations: six months of mobilization followed by 60 days of general war; general war without warning; and the resumption of hostilities in Korea, under a limited war situation.

Under the first assumption, the JCS concluded that airlift requirements could be met. Under the second hypothesis, the JCS estimated that all of MATS' capabilities would have to be used to meet "hardcore" requirements, defined as the transporting of personnel or cargo which were of critical military importance and had to be airlifted from the United States overseas or between overseas areas exclusively in military aircraft under military control. Corollary to this conclusion that MATS would be entirely taken up by its hard-core mission was the assumption that non-critical passengers and cargo would be transported in civil aircraft. The JCS established no airlift requirements to meet the third assumed situation -- that of limited war in Korea.

DEFENSE DEPARTMENT REPORT

The Defense Department Feb. 9, 1960 released a report on "The Role of MATS in Peace and War," including "Presidentially approved courses of action" for realignment of MATS to give commercial airlines more defense cargo and to strengthen the MATS hard-core capabilities. Subsequent recommendations for implementing the February report were released May 10 and June 22. (See below)

The report said the current over-all cargo airlift situation was "serious and unless action is taken to modernize and expand the national cargo capability, both military and commercial, effective airlift support cannot be assured the armed forces." The report said MATS airlift capability was adequate quantitatively, but "seriously deficient quality-wise." It proposed reduction of MATS routine operations through increased commercial airlines activity, and said the commercial lines were "willing and able" to undertake necessary modernization. Diversion of "sizeable quantities of government traffic would greatly accelerate" the process, the report said.

The report listed the following courses of action approved by President Eisenhower: joint Government-industry sharing of costs in development of long-range, economical turbine-powered cargo aircraft; legislation to guarantee loans arranged by commercial airlines to purchase modern aircraft designed to meet military needs; orderly transfer of MATS routine traffic to commercial carriers; better adaption of commercial airlift policies to long-range Defense Department needs; reexamination of the role of the Civil Reserve Air Fleet (CRAF) to insure its optimum defense use, and a study of the merits of turning over to the Air Force Reserve and Air National Guard surplus MATS aircraft.

REED REPORT

A civilian advisory committee to the Air Force April 12 released a report containing recommendations for revising MATS operations. Air Force Secretary Dudley C. Sharp Jan. 4 established the committee under the chairmanship of Gordon W. Reed, chairman of the Board of the Gulf Producing Co., New York, to study MATS operations and make recommendations as to the "most advantageous method of contracting by MATS for commercial aircraft", the number of training hours per aircraft required by MATS to assure readiness for emergencies, ways in which MATS should modernize equipment to improve its wartime performance and reduce costs, and other subjects.

The Committee recommended:

- Revision of MATS procurement procedures to provide for procurement of commercial transportation at rates approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board. It said the competitive bid method in use was less costly in the short run, but did not provide the payments and stable volume which would stimulate expansion of total national air cargo capacity, which was the "great need".
- Allocation of MATS business only to commercial carriers committed to the Civil Reserve Air Fleet (CRAF) program and meeting certain other requirements, such as having modern cargo aircraft firmly on order.
- Reevaluation of military requirements before making permanent revisions in the size of MATS and more peacetime training with military units which MATS would be required to deploy in times of emergency.

- Maintenance of a daily peacetime rate of MATS aircraft utilization equal to one-half the projected sustained wartime rate.
- Provision of an Air Force Reserve and Air National Guard units with suitable transport aircraft.
- Modernization of MATS with turbine powered cargo aircraft.
- Diversion of MATS passenger traffic to certified carriers equipped with modern jet planes at a faster rate than the diversion of cargo traffic, because of the scarcity in commercial cargo capacity.
- Continual review of the CRAF program for areas of improvement.
- Delay of any permanent reduction in MATS capabilities until civil capabilities were up to wartime commitments.

The committee said guaranteed loan legislation for modern commercial cargo craft procurement was not essential for insuring the development of such aircraft.

Subcommittee Hearings

COMMITTEE -- House Armed Services, Special National Military Airlift Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- March 8-May 11, intermittently, on "all aspects of the national airlift problem". The Subcommittee was created Jan. 29, 1960.

TESTIMONY -- March 8 -- Deputy Secretary of Defense James H. Douglas said existing military and civilian airlift capacity was "marginally capable of meeting wartime requirements under present plans (but) little has been done to modernize it."

Air Force Secretary Dudley C. Sharp said Congress should give the President authority to take over civilian air carriers in emergencies other than full-scale war. Sharp said if plans to reduce MATS operations where commercial airlines were capable of handling certain MATS functions was to be carried out, the Air Force should be assured that civilian aircraft would be available when needed and that airlines should be equipped with modern cargo and passenger planes.

March 9-10 -- Army Chief of Staff Lyman L. Lemnitzer said Air Force airlift capabilities were inadequate to deal with certain limited-war emergencies and recommended that MATS service be improved to make possible the transport of at least two divisions to "any trouble spot in the world within hours" after an emergency began. He said quick action would help to diminish the possibility of localized wars expanding into full-scale conflicts.

March 11 -- Lt. Gen. William H. Tunner, commander of MATS, said if the military cargo and passenger traffic were shifted from MATS to civilian carriers, costs would be increased by an amount ranging from $198.3 million to $391.3 million annually, depending on the rates charged.

March 18 -- Air Force Maj. Gen. Hewitt T. Wheless said he agreed with earlier testimony before the Subcommittee that there was a "need for more and better airlift" and that the objective of the Air Force was to modernize the "military fleet, particularly MATS, and greatly" expand and modernize its civil cargo capability. He said that among the limitations of the existing MATS system was its inability in case of war to "meet the probable demands of military action, concurrent mobilization" and efficient logistics supply on all fronts as well as the requirements of the civilian economy.

Air Force Col. Earl C. Hedlund said better use of airlift capabilities could greatly increase the efficiency of logistic operations and that as a result "substantial cutbacks in procurements could be realized."

March 29 -- Elwood R. Quesada, administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency, said a plane suitable for both military and civilian cargo operations could be developed within six years; in the meantime adapted passenger planes should not be bought in eagerness to build up the service.

April 4 -- S.G. Tipton, president of the Air Transport Assn., said MATS should reduce its competition with civilian airlines and that 93 percent of the passengers and 89 percent of the cargo carried by MATS could be carried by commercial carriers. Contracting with civilian lines to carry MATS traffic would not increase costs, Tipton said, because of the resulting reduction in MATS personnel and maintenance expenses.

Raymond A. Norden, president of Seaboard and Western Airlines, said the use of MATS as a worldwide air carrier decreased the service's availability for use in an emergency. He said the Government would "benefit from the transfer of air cargo traffic to the common carriers."

April 11 -- Juan T. Trippe, president of Pan American Airlines, said with more federal help the American overseas airlines could build a fleet of modern cargo jets.

April 20 -- Lt. Gen. William H. Tunner, commander of MATS, reported on a two-week airlift exercise, Big Slam-Puerto Pine, which began March 14. The exercise, which involved the transport of troops by MATS planes, successfully demonstrated the efficiency and speed with which MATS could handle emergency troop movements, Tunner said, but he added that limitations in MATS aircraft, 90 percent of which were obsolescent, restricted the number of troops which could be deployed. He said the exercise showed there was an immediate need for new jet transport planes and specially designed cargo planes. All aspects of a civilian reserve fleet, including crews, Tunner said, should be subject to military control in times of emergency in order to insure an effective operation.

May 9 -- Philip LeBoutillier Jr., Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense, said the Secretary of Defense would favor recommendations for carrying out the Presidentially approved course of action for the revitalization of MATS contained in a Feb. 9 Defense Department report.

May 10-11 -- Assistant Secretary of the Air Force Philip B. Taylor said his Department recommended: an analysis of the number and type of military aircraft required to carry out MATS hard-core missions; legislation to insure the necessary civilian capability in emergencies as well as in wartime; haulage of part of military traffic on regularly scheduled flights and part by air carriers qualifying as small businesses; and legislation to provide guaranteed loans for airlines purchasing new cargo aircraft.

SUBCOMMITTEE REPORT

The Subcommittee May 2 issued a report, in the form of a Subcommittee print, of the conclusions it had formed on the basis of testimony up to that date. The report criticized two of three situations used as assumptions in the 1959 JCS statement of requirements. It said that "the Subcommittee cannot foresee the luxury of a six-month mobilization period" and questioned the hypothetical situation in Korea on the grounds that it did not take into account the simultaneous outbreak of brushfire wars elsewhere.

Addressing itself mainly to the general-war-without-warning situation, the report said that the first 20 days of such a situation would be the most critical. During that period, it said "strategic airlift capability...is seriously inadequate." Dividing the first 20 days into two five-day periods and a 10-day period, the report concluded that "deficiencies" in the capability to carry cargo and passengers would show up in the first five days and worsen in subsequent days. The main reason for these deficiencies, the report said, was the obsolescence of most of the MATS aircraft, particularly the C-124s, the "workhorse" of the MATS fleet. These planes, in general, had only five more years of "useful life," the report noted, adding that "by any reasonable standard 452 of the 483 aircraft in MATS strategic inventory, while still able to perform a useful service, are obsolescent." Only 58 passenger jets in CRAF and 31 C-133s in MATS were truly "modern aircraft," the Subcommittee concluded.

The report made the following recommendations:

- Development of a "new, uncompromised turbine-powered cargo aircraft" both to improve military, strategic capabilities and, if possible, to fit in with "economic transportation of civilian cargo" by commercial carriers. Such planes -- to fit the Air Force's "Specific Operational Requirement" (SOR) -- would eventually be the backbone of the MATS fleet, but it was not anticipated that the SOR craft could be operational before 1965.
- Immediate purchase of 100 "off the shelf" aircraft to meet "interim modernization" needs of MATS. Fifty of the planes would be C-130-Es, extended-range versions of the existing C-130-B for nonstop, intercontinental troop and cargo transport; and the second 50 would be C-135 jets for use in support of Strategic Air Command strike recovery missions.
- Consideration of bringing under "centralized control" the various airlift operations outside MATS, such as the Strategic Air Command's Support Squadrons, the Air Materiel Command's Logistic Support Squadrons and the Navy and Marine Corps Organic Airlifts.
- Maintenance of a MATS fleet utilization rate at "not less than one-half the surge rate" which would have to be maintained on an extended basis in the event of general or limited war.
- Initial restriction of purchase of "civil augmentation airlift" to CRAF participants, at least to the extent of the annual Congressional set-aside ($80 million in the 1961 appropriation bill).
- Consideration of extending the President's authority "to assume control of transportation systems" to periods "of national emergency short of war".
- Requiring CRAF participants to have or procure "modern, long-range, turbine-powered aircraft" and to make agreements with their employees precluding work stoppages in time of Presidentially declared emergency.
- Using negotiated contracts -- rather than competitive bidding -- in the procurement of "civil airlift augmentation" from CRAF participants.

FUNDS VOTED

After its second week of hearings the Subcommittee voted to authorize Chairman Rivers to testify in support of the Subcommittee's recommendations for additional fiscal 1961 airlift appropriations. Appearing March 30 before the House Appropriations Defense Subcommittee, Rivers urged that the Congress add $300 million to the President's budget request for development of the SOR aircraft ($50 million) and off-the-shelf procurement of 100 planes for interim modernization of MATS ($250 million). Both the Senate and the House accepted the SOR item, but the Senate cut the procurement amount $50 million to $200 million, to be divided between C-130-Es and C-135s. (See story p. 373)

IMPLEMENTATION PROGRAM

A May 10 report from the Assistant Secretary of the Air Force to the Secretary of Defense set forth the Air Force program of implementation for the Feb. 9 report on MATS modernization (see above). In modifying this program in a June 22 memorandum, the Secretary of Defense required that determination of hard-core requirements and airlift augmentation needs be made without waiting for a new statement of airlift goals by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The memorandum recommended the use of the Oct. 15, 1959 JCS statement on approved requirements for airlift, which had been criticized by the Rivers Subcommittee.

As modified by the memorandum, the implementation program contained the following major courses of action:

- Modernization of the MATS fleet and expansion of the civil cargo capabity available through CRAF.
- Maintenance of a daily peacetime utilization rate of MATS equipment at "approximately five hours" for the present.
- Final action on development of the SOR craft and purchase of 50 C-130-Es and 50 C-135s for interim modernization.
- Decision by the JCS as to the airlift requirements which must be met by military craft and those which can be met by civil participation and an allotment of tasks and responsibilities accordingly.
- Transfer of "the maximum feasible amount" of military mail to commercial carriers.
- Allocation of functions to civil craft on the basis of performance guarantees, but without cutting into the military functions which MATS would have to perform in wartime or reducing the activity which MATS undertakes for training purposes.
- Encourage expansion and modernization of civil cargo capacity by negotiating procurement and transport contracts with CRAF participants, with the proviso that competitive bidding would be used if negotiations fail to produce satisfactory rates.
- Give preference in such negotiations to carriers "offering expansion capability in an emergency" and require that the carriers "equip themselves with modern turbine powered cargo aircraft".
- Propose legislation to give the President seizure powers over transportation in time of emergency short of war and consider legislation to give commercial airline personnel reserve military status, so that they could be called up in time of emergency.

The implementation program looked to a time when the MATS fleet would be modernized and its inventory reduced to allow for performance of hard-core airlift requirements, while the civil augmentation fleet would contain two parts: planes already under contract and flying regularly scheduled routes with cargo for military support and planes which each company "would be prepared to contribute" in emergencies requiring expansion of existing cargo routes or opening of new ones.

Progress on the Air Force program was limited at the end of the year to preparatory steps, and many of the courses of implementation waited on final Defense Department approval. Both the SOR craft designs and the restatement of hard-core airlift requirements by the JCS were hanging fire in December, though final action on them had been anticipated for September or October.

Other Hearings

Besides the Rivers Subcommittee, one other House subcommittee and one Senate subcommittee concerned themselves briefly with airlift problems in 1960.

• The House Science and Astronautics Special Investigating Subcommittee held hearings May 17, 18 and 24 on the development of supersonic air transport carriers to be patterned -- in all likelihood -- after the still-unfinished B-70 strategic bomber. Witnesses from industry and government expressed confidence that such a transport could be developed and would be extremely valuable. Few, however, maintained that progress in the field was likely in the near future.

In testimony May 18 John Adams of the Civil Aeronautics Board set the development costs of a commercial supersonic transport at between $250 million and $1 billion. Its commercial impact, he said, "would force its acquisition by most of the long-haul operators". He also stated that the best way to insure commercial development was for the Government "to go forward with development of a military aircraft such as the B-70." Vernon A. Johnson of Lockheed Aircraft Corp. said May 24 that the 2,000-mile-an-hour transport would serve a dual purpose, creating "as much as $2 billion worth of new business in the aircraft field" and also usable for certain military missions, such as tanker, reconnaissance and cargo and troop transportation. Johnson urged that Congress appropriate funds for the plane's development costs.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Dec. 11 -- Press reports said the Eisenhower Administration would approve a plan to subsidize development costs of a supersonic transport which would basically be a modified version of the B-70. Plans reportedly called for the plane to be operational between 1968 and 1970. The article quoted Federal Aviation Agency head Elwood R. Quesada as saying that industry should "put in not less than half the total cost."

• The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Aviation Subcommittee held hearings Feb. 9-18 on S 2774, a bill introduced by Subcommittee Chairman A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) to permit the Government to guarantee loans made by private lending agencies to private air carriers for up to 75 percent of the cost of new cargo aircraft, with a $75 million limit on the amount for which any one company could be guaranteed. Supported by witnesses from the Defense Department as an aid to military plans for expanding and modernizing civil cargo capacity, the bill was opposed by the Treasury Department and by American Airlines. The Subcommittee took no action on the bill.

GRAIN STORAGE COSTS

A special Senate subcommittee held 11 days of hearings (several in executive session) in 1960 on the cost to the Government of storing grain acquired by the Department of Agriculture's Commodity Credit Corp. through its price support operations. The Subcommittee Aug. 22 issued a report and recommendations.

One witness who testified to profiting from a silent partnership in a grain storage warehouse while employed by the Agriculture Department was later convicted of conflict-of-interest charges. During the hearings, the Agriculture Department drew up a new Uniform Grain Storage Agreement cutting storage rates paid by the Government to the nation's 11,000 commercial warehousemen by 19 percent.

Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Senate Agriculture and Forestry, Special Agriculture Investigating Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- Jan. 12-14, March 9, 11, 14, 23, April 28, May 12, 17, 26. The Subcommittee was established May 20, 1959 with Sen. Stuart Symington (D Mo.) as chairman. Other members: Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Herman E. Talmadge (D Ga.), William Proxmire (D Wis.), Milton R. Young (R N.D.) and John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.).

TESTIMONY -- Jan. 12 -- Managers of Midwest grain storage elevators said their firms made profits of from 69 to 167 percent by storing grain for the Government. One manager said that in 1959 the cost of storing one bushel of Government-held grain was about 6.84 cents; the Government paid his cooperative an average 16.74 cents per bushel. He said Government-approved tax write-offs had enabled him and many others to pay most of their expansion costs in recent years.

Ivan Summa, manager of the Farmers Cooperative Grain Co. of Archer, Iowa, said that under proper safeguards the rate for long-term storage could be reduced "7 to 12 percent."

Subcommittee Chairman Stuart Symington (D Mo.) said "these are the highest profits by far that I've ever seen." He cited Agriculture Department figures to show that Government grain storage and related costs have increased from $148.8 million in fiscal 1952 to an estimated $1.2 billion for fiscal 1961.

Jan. 14 -- Raymond J. Pollock, director of the Department's grain storage division, said one reason for the apparent high profits permitted warehousemen was that they had no assurance they would get the business of storing U.S. grain even after signing storage agreements with the Government. Symington asked: "Do you think those profits were fair from the standpoint of the taxpayers?"

"Yes," Pollock said, "in the same degree of fairness that losses may have been encountered by some under those same contracts."

Pollock and Robert A. Hanson, assistant director of the grain storage division, said cost studies recently were made on 537 of the 11,000 elevators storing Government-held grain and conferences were underway with storage industry representatives.

(In a floor speech Jan. 21, Symington said Pollock showed a "shocking" lack of knowledge about the program he directed and had admitted he did not know the cost of storing grain in Government bins or of commercial storage under the Uniform Grain Storage Agreement which Pollock was then renegotiating. Pollock resigned May 13 for "a number of personal reasons." He said the Subcommittee investigation "had nothing to do with it at all.")

March 11 -- Earl C. Corey, who had resigned Jan. 22 as director of the Portland, Ore., Commodity Office of the Agriculture Department's Commodity Stabilization Service, told the Subcommittee he had made $83,500 from a silent partnership in a warehouse that stored Government-owned grain. (Corey was convicted Aug. 9 with his partner, Lawrence M. Smith, on conflict of interest and other charges involving the warehouse operation, and both were sentenced Nov. 14 to two-year prison terms, which they appealed.)

March 31 -- Ralph S. Roberts, Agriculture Department administrative assistant secretary, said the Department was studying 12 possible conflict-of-interest cases. W. George Goold, assistant personnel director, said both Corey and Frank R. McGregor had resigned under pressure, McGregor Oct. 7, 1959 from his job as deputy administrator of commodity stabilization. It was alleged that McGregor had maintained his connections with a management concern he operated and with the Council of Independent Business, although he had filed papers saying that the connections had been severed.

Roberts said the 12 new cases under study resulted from a questionnaire the Department sent out to 15,000 employees Dec. 31, 1959. The employees were required to list all financial holdings and other outside interests as of Feb. 1, the deadline for returning the form.

May 12 -- Philip A. Charom, assistant director of the Government Accounting Office, said that grain storage rates allowed by the Commodity Credit Corp. in past years had provided profit rates greatly in excess of those usually allowed in Government contracts. (The Agriculture Department May 5 ordered a reduction in the storage rates, effective July 1, averaging 19 percent.)

Charom said the GAO had checked 57 selected commercial warehouses storing wheat and corn for the Commodity Credit Corp. under the standard grain storage agreement and had found that storage costs in 34 ranged from 4.5 cents a bushel to 8.9 cents while storage rates provided net profits per bushel ranging from 85 percent to 265 percent of estimated storage costs.

May 17 -- L.A. Laybourn of Salina, Kan., a spokesman for the Grain and Feed Dealers National Assn., said the 19 percent cut in storage rates was "arbitrary and unjustified treatment."

Laybourn also objected to an amendment which had been attached to the House version of the fiscal 1961 Agriculture Department appropriations bill (HR 12117) requiring the use of Government-owned facilities, such as metal bins or reserve ships, for storing surplus products if it were cheaper than renting space in commercial warehouses. (The provision was stricken from the Senate and conference versions of the bill; Senate-House conferees agreed that commercial storage should be given preference unless Government storage at lower cost was available. See story p. 397)

The commercial elevator and warehouse industry had expanded its capacity far beyond economic needs under "gun-in-the-back" pressure from the Government, Laybourn testified.

May 26 -- Frank A. Theis, president of the Simonds-Shields-Theis Grain Co. of Kansas City, Mo., and of the Terminal Elevator Grain Merchants Assn., said that election-year political charges had frightened the Agriculture Department into cutting grain storage rates.

Theis said the Department had used erroneous calculations in concluding that the grain warehousemen were making large profits from storing Government-owned surplus grain.

STORAGE RATES CUT

Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson May 5 announced his Department's new Uniform Grain Storage Agreements, effective July 1. The contracts provided a 19 percent cut from existing storage rates, and were to be offered individually to 11,000 grain warehousemen. Benson said the rate cut would save taxpayers more than $100 million annually.

Earlier, Rep. George McGovern (D S.D.) introduced H Con Res 651, on which there was no subsequent Congressional action, to maintain existing storage rates for another year "in order to provide time...to negotiate any needed changes in rates and to provide a basis for recapture of excessive profits."

SUBCOMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

The Subcommittee Aug. 22 issued a report (in the form of a committee print) signed by all six members and containing the following recommendations:

(1) A reorganized farm program, "based on a national food and fiber policy," was needed to reduce food stocks being stored by the Government to a reasonable level. From 1952-60 the value (at purchase cost) of CCC-held commodities had increased from about $1.5 billion to $10.4 billion. The costs of interest, storage, handling and transportation had jumped from $148.8 million in 1952 to about $1.2 billion in 1960. For grains, the storage and handling costs to the CCC in 1960 were $587 million; the U.S. held over 1 billion bushels each of corn and wheat on June 30, 1959.

(2) The Agriculture Department was making a "serious mistake" in using a Uniform Grain Storage Agreement giving the same rates to warehousemen everywhere. The Department should submit recommendations to Congress on a new type of grain storage agreement which might include: (a) a renegotiation provision to recapture excessive profits; (b) recognition of geographic differentials in storage and handling costs of warehousemen; (c) recognition that a guaranteed term of storage removed much of the risk to warehousemen of losing money maintaining unused facilities, and therefore that there should be rate differentials between long-term and short-term storage contracts; (d) recognition that a warehouseman had lower per bushel storage costs where a high percentage of a grain elevator's capacity was in use, and therefore that the Government should pay lower per bushel rental rates where this condition obtained.

(3) The Agriculture Department should improve its cost-study techniques so that in negotiating for storage space, it knew what warehousemen's costs were.

(4) The Commodity Stabilization Service should see that its policies were administered uniformly by its various regional offices, to avoid the lack of coordination that in the past resulted in actions "wasteful of public funds."

(5) The CSS should develop "adequate safeguards" to insure that reports of its Internal Audit Division were noted and acted on promptly.

Supplemental views were filed by Young and Cooper.

NSA DEFECTORS

The defection of two National Security Agency cryptographers to the Soviet Union in July 1960 led two Congressional committees to hold executive hearings in September on the matter.

The two men, Bernon F. Mitchell of Eureka, Calif., and William H. Martin of Ellensburg, Wash., left the NSA on vacation June 24, due back July 11. The Defense Department declared them missing Aug. 1 and Aug. 5 said "there is a likelihood they had gone beyond the Iron Curtain" but they had no information that would be "prejudicial" to the United States if it fell into Soviet hands.

At a Sept. 6 Moscow press conference, Mitchell and Martin said they were "worried" about U.S. airspace violations, "disenchanted by the Government's practice of intercepting and deciphering the secret communications of its own allies," and felt that the U.S., "in carrying out policies dangerous to world peace, should not be allowed to rely upon...emotional attachments to guarantee the loyalty of its citizens." They said they had left in a Maryland safe deposit box a "parting statement" to explain their departure, read a copy of it and said it had been "suppressed" by the Administration.

Mitchell and Martin also said that in February 1959 they had talked to "a Congressman who had publicly expressed concern over the State Department's concealing from Congress pertinent facts" about a U.S. C-130 plane shot down over Russia in September 1958. They said they informed the Congressman of the plane's "intelligence mission," which Martin had learned of from an NSA "high official," but that their conversation with the Congressman was interrupted when he received a call from William Macomber, assistant secretary of state for congressional relations, who requested him to "refrain from further public discussion of the C-130 incident."

A Sept. 8 news story said Rep. Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio) might have been the Congressman Mitchell and Martin said they had visited, and that, in a telephone interview at his home, Hays said two men representing themselves as employees of the Central Intelligence Agency had visited his office with such a story. Hays, according to the news story, said he did not believe the men looked like the published pictures of Mitchell and Martin, that he did not recall any phone call from Macomber on the plane incident, and that he had reported the men's visit to the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

In Washington, White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty Sept. 6 told newsmen President Eisenhower considered the two men "self-confessed traitors."

The Defense Department Sept. 6 said the statements of Mitchell and Martin, which detailed alleged NSA organization and functions, were "falsehoods," that the men were "tools of Soviet propaganda" and that one of them was "mentally sick" and both "obviously confused." The Department also said it had obtained under a court order, the note the two men had left from the Maryland bank in early August but that it had been withheld because it was under investigation and would have "served Communist purposes only."

The Department Sept. 12 announced it had assigned the Air Force inspector general, Lt. Gen. Joseph F. Carroll, to investigate the defection with special emphasis on how or whether the men made contacts with Soviet or Communist agents and whether any NSA employee was involved in helping them.

Un-American Activities Hearing

The House Un-American Activities Committee Sept. 14 held an executive hearing with testimony by Dr. Clarence Schilt, a Maryland psychiatrist whom Mitchell had consulted. The psychiatrist's appearance was reported in a Sept. 15 story in the Washington Post, which said medical history data available to the Committee showed Mitchell had visited Schilt three times, between May 25 and June 3, and had carried on an intellectual discussion of homosexuality. The story said that in his sessions with Schilt, Mitchell never discussed Communist ideology nor denounced his country for the U-2 incident; and gave no basis to believe he was being blackmailed into defection.

After an executive hearing Sept. 16 Chairman Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) said that a NSA official had testified that the agency had "quite a problem" with sexual perversion and was considering setting up a psychiatric clinic to combat it. The Defense Department, which Sept. 2 had denied that there was evidence of homosexuality in the records on Mitchell or Martin, said Sept. 12 that Mitchell, during screening before his 1957 employment by NSA, had said that "during his teens he had engaged in certain abnormal sexual practices." Walter had said Sept. 6 that the Federal Bureau of Investigation had advised the NSA before Mitchell and Martin were hired that one of them was a homosexual. Walter said he could not identify which one he meant. The Defense Department's Sept. 12 statement said that Mitchell was not considered a security risk because he had volunteered the information about his previous acts and had given assurances the practices had not been repeated since his adolescence.

The Committee also held executive hearings Oct. 11 and 12, but no information was released.

Armed Services Hearings

House Armed Services Committee Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) Sept. 7 announced he had named a special subcommittee to investigate Government intelligence agencies. Named for the special inquiry were Rep. Paul J. Kilday (D Texas), chairman; Rep. Leslie C. Arends (R Ill.), and Rep. Porter Hardy Jr. (D Va.).

In closed session testimony Sept. 15 before the subcommittee, Defense Department general counsel J. Vincent Burke Jr. said some hand-written briefing notes available to Mitchell and Martin were unaccounted for at present and while neither man could cause any damage to the security of U.S. communications, they could aid Russia in rendering its communications activities secure. He said both men had passed lie detector tests and other security checks before they were cleared for secret NSA work. The subcommittee also held closed hearings Sept. 16 and 19.

Kilday Sept. 19 said that it was his personal conclusion that while the flight of the two men did not make the U.S. code and cipher system "insecure", Mitchell and Martin appeared to be "in a position to aid the Russians in making Russian intelligence more secure." Kilday said that neither man "should have been employed in a sensitive agency" because "information showed them to be unstable".

COMMITTEES INVESTIGATE NUCLEAR PROBLEMS

Problems arising from the conquest of nuclear energy produced three sets of Congressional hearings in 1960: the Senate Foreign Relations Disarmament Subcommittee Feb. 4 held a hearing on the feasibility of enforcing a nuclear-test-ban treaty; the Joint Atomic Energy Special Radiation and Research and Development Subcommittees, meeting jointly April 19-22, also heard testimony on a nuclear-test ban; and the Special Radiation Subcommittee May 24-June 3 investigated radiation hazards.

Nuclear Test Ban

● Background-- On Aug. 20, 1958, an international conference of nuclear scientists, meeting in Geneva, issued a report concluding that it was "technically feasible" to establish a "workable and effective control system to detect violations of an agreement on the world-wide suspension of nuclear weapons tests." The conference said a system of 180 control stations equipped with seismic devices and stationed at various parts of the globe (about 22 of them in Russia) would be capable of detecting almost all ocean and atmospheric nuclear explosions, up to about 50 miles altitude, of one kiloton (equivalent in force to 1,000 tons of dynamite) or over, and most underground explosions of five kilotons or over. To differentiate some questionable underground explosions from natural phenomena like earthquakes, the conference recommended a system of mobile teams of radiation experts to be sent to suspected explosion sites, and similar reconnaissance by airplanes equipped with radiation devices to measure fallout. Specific devices for each phase of the policing operation were recommended. The conference also said there were good possibilities for detecting high-altitude explosions -- above 50 miles -- but did not make specific recommendations.

On the basis of these findings, negotiations for a nuclear-test-ban treaty began Oct. 31, 1958 in Geneva among the U.S., U.K. and U.S.S.R. Earlier that year, March 31, the Soviet Union had announced it was suspending nuclear weapons tests; the U.S. said it would suspend tests for one year from the beginning of negotiations, and not resume them after that as long as there seemed some hope of agreement. (1958 Almanac p. 705)

Although the nuclear-ban talks continued sporadically throughout 1959 and 1960, these major differences appeared to bar agreement:

(1) On Jan. 5, 1959 President Eisenhower's Science Advisory Committee reported that U.S. underground tests completed just before the Geneva talks began indicated it was much harder to differentiate between small underground explosions below 20 kilotons and earthquakes than previously believed. In other words, instead of being able to determine the nature of all "seismic events" above 5 kilotons reasonably accurately (whether they were earthquakes or atomic blasts), it was possible to determine the nature only of seismic events of 20 kilotons or over.

(2) A RAND Corp. study published Dec. 20, 1958, and various other studies, indicated that by conducting underground nuclear tests in large deep cavities in the earth, it was possible to make them appear -- to seismographs -- only one three-hundredth as powerful as they actually were.

These two sets of findings cast doubt on the adequacy of the detection facilities envisioned in the Aug. 20, 1958 scientists' report. The 1959 and 1960 negotiations at Geneva were tied up in the question of whether the new U.S. findings were correct, and if so whether this required the use of more detection equipment than had been envisioned when the negotiations began.

(3) Still other counts of disagreement involved the number of annual on-site inspections that were to be permitted on each nation's territory under the proposed treaty (the U.S. favored more, the Soviets fewer than 20 inspections a year); the staffing of the inspection teams and of the seismic stations; and voting procedures on the control commission that was to supervise the test-ban detection system.

On Feb. 11, 1960 the U.S. proposed that the Soviets agree to a treaty -- with adequate inspection provisions -- banning all nuclear tests that could be easily detected: space, land, atmospheric and large underground tests. Once this treaty was concluded, the participants would agree to a voluntary, temporary moratorium on small underground tests -- those below a seismic magnitude of 4.75 (below about 20 kilotons). Simultaneously, research would go forward on ways to detect small underground tests, and when such ways had been found, the small tests too would be formally banned and become subject to formal control procedures.

The Soviets Feb. 20 accepted this basic scheme, but proposed that the moratorium be at least four years -- a period unacceptable to the West.

Soviet acceptance of the basic idea in principle did not, however, resolve the existing differences over on-site inspections, staffing and voting -- all matters requiring solution before the Feb. 11 U.S. proposal could go into effect. This agreement was not forthcoming as negotiations continued throughout 1960.

President Eisenhower, meanwhile, May 7 announced that new underground tests, the first since 1958, were being planned.

● Hearings -- The Joint Atomic Energy Special Radiation and Research and Development Subcommittee April 19-22 held hearings on test-ban enforcement problems (earlier testimony at the Disarmament Subcommittee hearing Feb. 4 substantially parallelled the April 19-22 testimony).

TESTIMONY -- April 19 -- Dr. Harold C. Brown of the Lawrence Radiation Laboratory, Livermore, Calif., a scientific adviser on the Geneva negotiations, said any nation determined to sidestep a test ban could make the probability of detection "very close to zero", and finding a violator by inspection "would be only an accident."

April 20 -- Dr. Edward Teller, University of California physicist known as the "father of the H-bomb", said the Soviet Union could be testing nuclear weapons of any size in outer space or conducting small weapons tests in concealed underground sites and that the U.S. had no capability to detect such tests.

Teller said a "cheater" could continue testing with impunity by grouping several explosions together to confuse seismographic detectors, by inserting substances in deep holes to soak up a good amount of the energy detonated, or by testing far out in space.

Dr. Albert L. Latter, RAND Corp. scientist, said recent underground experiments showed seismic signals from nuclear shots could be made to appear only half or one-third as large merely by moving the site from volcanic tuff, as used in Nevada, to the Louisiana salt mines. Construction of larger holes could reduce the signals 120 to 300 times, he said.

Dr. Richard Latter, brother of Albert and also a RAND Corp. physicist, said a 10-fold improvement in concealment of underground tests would require a 100-fold improvement in detection methods for adequate controls.

April 21 -- Eleven scientists agreed during a panel discussion that underground tests of small nuclear weapons could not be detected by any feasible control network, but they disagreed on the level below which detection would be impossible, and on the required size of a control network within the Soviet Union.

Dr. Hans A. Bethe, Cornell University physicist, said a network of 600 seismic monitor stations within Russia probably would assure adequate warning of any test cheating down to the 20-kiloton Hiroshima-size bomb.

Dr. Richard B. Roberts, Carnegie Institute biophysicist, said if control stations were spaced about 250 miles apart, with 150 stations within the Soviet Union, there would be good detection results. He said detection of underground or underwater tests would require further research.

Dr. Raymond Peterson of the United Geophysical Corp. and Frank Coker of the United Electric Dynamics Corp. said an Air Force study they were preparing indicated only 21 or 22 stations would be feasible in Russia because of "unfavorable" topography and geography.

Carleton M. Beyer of the Defense Department's Advanced Research Projects Agency said studies indicated the cost of a 180-station network would be about $1 billion and would take up to six years to complete.

April 22 -- Beyer said a research program was getting under way in ARPA to improve detection techniques, and that $9.6 million was available so far for the work with $8.6 million of it for studies on underground blasts.

Allen F. Donovan, vice president of Space Technology Laboratories, an Air Force research and engineering firm, said the Russians would have an advantage over the U.S. in conducting space nuclear weapons tests because of more powerful rockets. He said satellites to detect space tests could now be designed and equipped, and the Air Force was establishing a worldwide network of tracking stations which would be used to serve such satellites.

Dr. Richard F. Taschek, Atomic Energy Commission scientist, said he believed six earth satellites would have to be in orbit continually for an effective space detection system and that it would take at least four or five years to put a full-scale system in operation. He said there would be "a high probability of success" in such a system.

April 23 -- Rep. Chet Holifield (D Calif.), who presided at the hearings, said in a closing statement that testimony indicated that a control network, "for the next several years", could not detect and identify either underground bomb tests "whose seismic signals record the equivalent of a non-muffled bomb explosion of 20 kilotons or less" or "muffled tests of 100 kilotons or more set off deep underground in large cavities." He said "from that time forward, it will be a race between improved means of detection and identification, as against improved means of concealing and muffling nuclear tests," and that a "vigorous and sustained" research and development program was needed.

Following the hearings, Sen. Albert Gore (D Tenn.) April 27 said that testimony before the Committee had "seriously questioned, if not weakened" the technical basis of the President's Feb. 11 test ban proposal.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Oct. 3 -- Disarmament Subcommittee Chairman Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), long an advocate of a test-ban agreement, said if no such agreement were reached by June 1961 the U.S. should resume nuclear testing because it "cannot indefinitely accept a situation whereby its tests have stopped and there is no agreement and no control system to verify that the Soviet Union has also stopped."

● Disarmament Conference -- In 1960, East-West disarmament talks, which had broken up in disagreement on Sept. 6, 1957, were resumed but again broken off.

Delegates of the Soviet Union, Bulgaria, Rumania, Czechoslovakia and Poland June 27 withdrew from the 10-nation disarmament conference in Geneva.

The conference began March 15, was recessed April 29 for the then-impending Paris summit meetings and resumed June 7. Soviet delegates, which had submitted a new disarmament plan June 2 for consideration when the talks resumed, broke up the conference, charging Western refusal to negotiate seriously just as the Western nations were about to present a counterproposal.

● Pauling -- Dr. Linus C. Pauling, Nobel Prize-winning biochemist of the California Institute of Technology, was the sole witness at June 21 hearings of the Senate Judiciary Internal Security Subcommittee. The hearings were called to investigate alleged Communist influence in the nuclear-test-ban movement. Chairman Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.) ordered Pauling to produce the names of persons who helped him circulate a 1957 petition, calling for a test-ban agreement, that was ultimately signed by 11,021 scientists in 49 countries and presented to the United Nations in 1958.

While Pauling agreed to turn over the names of those who signed the petition and of about 1,000 persons to whom he wrote asking for help in circulating it, he refused to disclose the names of those who actually did help him circulate it, saying he feared reprisals against them.

Requested to reappear with the desired names Oct. 11, Pauling appealed to the courts, which held they could not intervene at that stage. On Oct. 11 Pauling again testified before the Subcommittee and again refused its request.

Radiation Hazards

● Exposure Standards -- The Federal Radiation Council, established in 1959 (PL 86-373), May 13 released a report on its first year of operation and seven recommendations for radiation exposure standards. President Eisenhower May 13 endorsed the recommendations and made them binding on federal agencies and private firms.

Referring to health hazards, the Council said the latest findings were as follows: acute doses of radiation could produce either immediate or delayed effects or both; acute whole-body doses of 25 rems or more produced increasingly obvious immediate effects on human health, culminating in death at levels of a few hundred rems; the body appeared to be able to repair damage of any given dose more effectively if it accumulated through chronic irradiation than if the same total dose was received by acute (concentrated) exposure; the delayed effects of radiation were generally indistinguishable from familiar illnesses normally present in the population; delayed effects included genetic changes transmitted to future generations, tumors, lifespan shortening and growth and development changes; children, infants and unborn infants were more sensitive to radiation than adults, and the various organs of the body also differed in sensitivity; there was insufficient evidence to determine whether there was a damage threshold (a point below which no damage occurred), or whether any radiation, regardless of how low the dose, was harmful.

Recommendations:

(1) There should not be any man-made radiation exposure without a definite expectation of benefit resulting therefrom.

(2) The term "Radiation Protection Guide" should be adopted for federal use, defined as the radiation dose which should not be exceeded "without careful consideration of the reasons for doing so; every effort should be made to encourage the maintenance of radiation doses as far below this guide as practicable."

(3) The following Radiation Protection Guides -- all "well below the level where biological damage has been observed in humans" -- should be adopted:

For radiation workers: maximum accumulated dose for the whole body, head and trunk, active blood-forming organs, gonads, or lens of eye should not exceed, in rems, five times the number of years the worker is over 18 years old, or three rems in 13 weeks; exposure of the skin of the whole body and thyroid should not exceed 30 rems a year or 10 rems in 13 weeks; exposure of hands and forearms, feet and ankles should not exceed 75 rems a year or 25 rems in 13 weeks; total body-burden of the bone should not exceed 0.1 microgram of radium-226 or its biological equivalent; exposure of all other organs should not exceed 15 rems a year of five rems in 13 weeks.

For general population: for individuals, whole body exposure should not exceed 0.5 rems a year; per capita gonadal exposure should not exceed five rems in 30 years.

(4) Current protection guides already in use by federal agencies should be continued on an interim basis for organ doses to the general population, since recommendations for exposure of organs of the general population, other than gonads, were not ready yet.

(5) "Radioactivity Concentration Guides" should be adopted for federal use. These would show what kind of exposure doses were produced by different concentrations of radioactivity in different environments, and would enable the concentrations to be controlled so doses would be kept to recommended maximums.

(6) For the time being, until it was determined in each federal agency whether the importance of its research and activities was enough to warrant greater exposure of workers than recommended by the Council, concentration of radioactivity should be kept to a level based on the exposure recommendations of the Council.

(7) The federal agencies should apply the Radiation Protection Guides outlined by the Council with "judgment and discretion". "The Guides may be exceeded only after the federal agency having jurisdiction over the matter has carefully considered the reasons for doing so." On the basis of the Guides, each agency should develop detailed standards tailored to meet its needs.

● Hearings -- Highlights of May 24-June 3 hearings by the Special Radiation Subcommittee:

May 31 -- Dr. Russell H. Morgan, Johns Hopkins University chief radiologist, endorsed the Council's recommendations.

W.A. McAdams, General Electric Co., said personnel exposure for most industrial radiation work was substantially below permissible limits.

June 3 -- Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Arthur S. Flemming submitted a report on what HEW had done, under the Executive Order and law (PL 86-373) setting up the Council, to meet its "primary responsibility within the Executive Branch" for analysis, collation and interpretation of materials on environmental radiation levels from all sources. Flemming said a monthly magazine, "Radiological Health Data," had been established to give statistics on all new data; a study of strontium 90 levels in wheat had been undertaken, which concluded that "present intake of strontium 90 from all diet sources...does not constitute a public health hazard warranting any regulatory action"; additional PHS grants had been made to the states for research and training on radiation problems; new laboratories had been built; radiation surveillance networks had been expanded; and Food and Drug Administration facilities improved.

The American Municipal Assn. said more than 6,000 private atomic licensees were operating in 1,500 localities. Under PL 86-373 cities would soon be taking over some safety regulation, but "it is not possible to report any significant progress in providing federal encouragement and assistance to localities." The group proposed: development of national regulatory standards and of model city radiation ordinances; increased dissemination of information by the U.S.; aid in training city personnel for regulatory duties; establishment of an advisory group, including city, labor and industry representatives, to the Federal Radiation Council; development of a clear procedure for notification of all local government units when the AEC licensed firms to use atomic materials; study of legal ways to maintain low population density where power reactors were built; and a national clearinghouse on radiation problems and information.

● Subcommittee Report -- The Subcommittee Nov. 21 released a summary-analysis of the hearings, and Holifield called for "strengthening" the role of the Federal Radiation Council. The summary-analysis said major unresolved problems involving the FRC were:

(1) Would the President, assisted by the FRC, exercise final and direct responsibility for setting radiation protection standards for each federal agency, or would the decision be left to the individual agencies? (2) What would be the FRC's role in meeting the problem of ever-increasing man-made radiation exposure levels? (3) Would there be conflicts between the functions of the FRC and the National Committee for Radiation Protection and Measurement (a non-Government scientific agency whose findings on radiation protection had been the standard guide until the FRC was formed)? (4) Did the FRC's activities remove standards-setting functions from the application of usual administration and procedural safeguards (such as the right of appeal) set forth by statute? (5) Did the FRC provide for adequate representation of agency, professional (including scientific) and public interests? (6) What staffing was necessary for the FRC, and should the FRC be primarily a policy group or a group devoted to the technical details of standards setting? (7) Under current conditions, what were "normal peacetime operations" on which radiation risk was to be based?

The Subcommittee report said "a major unresolved problem" was how to maintain flexibility in radiation exposure standards and at the same time meet the need for legal precision in regulating exposure.

SUBCOMMITTEE INVESTIGATES DRUG PRICES

The Senate Judiciary Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee, headed by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), in December 1959 began another phase of its broad, continuing inquiry into administered prices, with an investigation of the prescription drug industry. Administered prices are those set without regard to supply and demand by a few large companies holding a large share of a market. (1959 Almanac p. 726; 1958 Almanac p. 704)

The hearings, held over a seven-month period and scheduled to resume in 1961, brought Subcommittee charges of over-pricing and excessive profits, violation of antitrust laws in agreements for production and marketing of drugs, and misleading advertising. The Food and Drug Administration came under fire when the hearings in May focused on alleged conflict of interest activities of Dr. Henry Welch, director of the FDA's Antibiotics Division. Subsequent disclosures of Welch's activities as an editor and contributor to several large medical publications and a partner in a medical publishing company, which yielded him financial profits, led Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Arthur S. Flemming to demand Welch's immediate resignation. The disclosures also led Flemming to appoint a board of scientists to review Welch's decisions at FDA and to set up a special FDA investigative unit to check charges by some witnesses about employees' practices in the agency.

The hearings covered these subjects: marketing practices on newly developed wonder drugs; sale of tranquilizers; general drug industry problems; handling of oral anti-diabetic drugs; prescription by trade name instead of by medical or generic name; activities of Dr. Welch and the pricing of antibiotic drugs.

Legislative proposals prompted by the hearings included one by Kefauver (S 3677) to require HEW licensing of drug manufacturers, pharmacists and others making or selling drugs for use in interstate commerce and to require FDA to evaluate new drugs for their efficacy as well as safety. Flemming also sent Congress a proposal (S 3815, HR 12949) for amendment of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act of 1938 to tighten federal control over drug manufacturing. The board of scientists which reviewed the Welch case, in a September report to Flemming, recommended legislative action to strengthen FDA statutory authority over the drug industry. Since hearings were not concluded in 1960, no legislative action was taken.

The FDA in December issued new regulations covering the labeling used in promoting drugs and the marketing of new drugs.

Background

Evidence of possible price-fixing irregularities in the drug industry came before Congress in 1957 in a report by the House Government Operations Intergovernmental Relations Subcommittee on activities of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare relating to polio vaccine. The report (Aug. 15, 1957 -- H Rept 1175) was based on October 1956-March 1957 hearings and it recommended that the Justice Department extend its inquiry of possible price-fixing in the sale of polio vaccine and also conduct a new investigation on possible antitrust law violations in the sale of drugs and hospital supplies to the Government.

The report said hearings indicated state and federal agencies purchasing the vaccine "received literally hundreds of identical bids throughout the country" and that the vaccine prices "exhibited an unusual resistance to the law of supply and demand." Both HEW and the Public Health Service were criticized because they "did not exercise a proper regard for economy and efficiency" in handling the vaccine purchase program and "did not exercise proper precautions to guard against the possibility of antitrust law violations...."

Announcement of Senate hearings on administered prices in the drug industry was made in September 1959 by Kefauver. He said his Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee also would seek to determine whether several large commercial banks and mutual funds had acquired corporate control of any of the 20 principal pharmaceutical manufacturers. A Subcommittee economist said financial records on drug company ownership had been subpenaed from three New York City banks: the Chase Manhattan Bank, Bankers Trust and the Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. Subpenas also were served to several investment houses and mutual funds as well as to the 20 drug manufacturers, he said.

Hearings opened in December 1959 and Kefauver, in an opening statement, said the investigation would deal with two broad categories: product hearings on each of the major types of drugs -- antibiotics, hormones, diabetic drugs, tranquilizers, etc. -- and hearings on the general financial structure and practices of the drug industry. He outlined the unique manner of marketing prescription drugs and said the prospective customer could not shop around for lower prices because prescriptions usually were written out in trade terms. Although he could not know what he should get, the consumer had to take exactly what had been prescribed by his physician, Kefauver said, and as a consequence, "the drug industry is unusual in that he who buys does not order and he who orders does not buy."

1959 Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Senate Judiciary, Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- Dec. 7, 1959 - Sept. 14, 1960, intermittently, on administered prices in the drug industry.

TESTIMONY -- Dec. 7 -- Sen. George A. Smathers (D Fla.) said the prices of newly developed wonder drugs placed them beyond the financial reach of many persons of average and low income. He said some medicines produced in the United States cost the patient many times as much as similar preparations sold abroad.

The Subcommittee produced figures showing that drugs marketed by the Schering Co. of Bloomfield, N.J., were marked up as much as 7,000 percent. Schering President Francis C. Brown said the figures were misleading and did not include the company's business costs. He said vast amounts were spent for research, product supply and distribution and promotional and information campaigns.

Dec. 8 -- Brown denied Subcommittee charges that licensing arrangements made by Schering with five other drug firms for the production and distribution of two hormone drugs constituted a violation of antitrust laws. Staff investigators had reported that Schering had agreed to supply the five companies -- Merck and Co., Upjohn Co., Pfizer and Co., Parke, Davis and Co. and CIBA Pharmaceuticals Inc. -- with the drugs in return for royalty payments of 30 to 50 cents on every 100-tablet bottle for three years. Brown held that Schering had a legal right to obtain royalty "rewards" for discovering the drug.

Dec. 9 -- John T. Connor, president of Merck and Co., denied that his company's prices were excessive, that the major firms kept prices at fixed levels, that drugs were sold more cheaply overseas than in the U.S., that supplies of new drugs were restricted and that an international cartel existed in the drug market.

Dec. 10 -- Dr. Louis Lasagna, director of Johns Hopkins University's clinical pharmacology division, said drug manufacturers had a "pharmaceutical numbers racket" of bringing out new drugs to make existing ones obsolete, that many new ones were of "miserable" quality, and that Merck & Co. had used misleading advertising to promote a new anti-arthritic drug.

Dr. Philip S. Hench, Mayo Foundation professor, challenged Lasagna's qualifications as an "expert" and said he saw nothing objectionable in Merck advertising.

John T. Connor, Merck president, said the Government was given lower prices than druggists on the new drug because it usually bought in larger quantities and had its own quality control facilities. He said Merck could not stay in business if it had to rely on the level of profits earned from Government sales.

Dec. 11 -- Seymour N. Blackman, executive secretary of Premo Pharmaceutical Laboratories, South Hackensack, N.J., said big drug firms had won control of medicine pricing by controlling patents on new wonder drugs.

Dr. Ethel Percy Andrus, president of the Retired Persons Assn. and the National Retired Teachers Assn., said three drug manufacturers, Parke, Davis & Co., Lederle Laboratories and W.H. Merrill & Co., had refused to sell medicines to the organizations' Washington pharmacy, established for non-profit, discount sales to members.

Dec. 12 -- Subcommittee Counsel Rand Dixon said the Upjohn Co. used only 14 cents worth of raw materials to make a hormone product it sold for $15, an increase of "about 10,000 percent."

E. Gifford Upjohn, the company's president, said the comparison was unfair since raw material was "but a fraction of the cost," and administrative, selling, advertising and distribution expenses and taxes should be included as part of the "cost of doing business."

Subcommittee Chairman Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) said hearings would resume in mid-January and that evidence showed an annual spending of $250 million for drugs that were no good while major drug firms over the past three years had the highest profit rate of any industry.

1960 Hearings

TRANQUILIZERS

The second phase of the hearings began Jan. 21, 1960. Kefauver said the purpose was to determine whether purchasers of tranquilizer drugs were "adequately protected by the force of competition." He said the sale of tranquilizers had grown into a $200-million-a-year business since being introduced into the U.S. in the early 1950s.

As the hearings opened, Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) challenged the "absolutely incredible and fantastic" reports of drug markups disclosed during the Subcommittee's probe of arthritis drug prices in December 1959. He said he was startled by newspaper accounts of the earlier hearings which he did not attend. He said testimony from drug manufacturers showed profits of 16-20 percent, a "far cry" from allegations of 2,000 to 7,000 percent margins. Kefauver replied that the findings of the Subcommittee were objective and that it had tried to determine why drugs sold in the U.S. were more expensive than those marketed abroad. "Frankly," he said, "a satisfactory answer was not forthcoming." Highlights of testimony:

Jan. 21 -- Walter A. Munns, president of Smith, Kline and French Laboratories, said his company knew it was sometimes impossible for poorer patients to afford tranquilizers, but he said the prices were reasonable and he defended the company's profit margins.

Kefauver said the prices and profits were "completely out of line" and noted that the company ranked second among the Nation's 500 most profitable manufacturing firms.

Jan. 22 -- Mike Gorman of the National Committee Against Mental Illness proposed a Government crackdown on what he called "profiteering" in tranquilizers.

Jan. 26 -- Henry H. Hoyt and Dr. Frank M. Berger of Carter Products Inc., makers of Miltown, denied Subcommittee allegations of excessive profits on their product and said they made only a little over a penny per tablet.

Jan. 27 -- Hoyt, president of Carter Products Inc., said his company had never conferred with other firms on the price of meprobamate, a tranquilizing drug. Hoyt's statement was in reply to Kefauver's comment that several bids to sell tranquilizers to the Government had corresponded to a thousandth of a cent.

(The Justice Department the same day filed a civil antitrust suit against Carter Products Inc. and American Home Products Corp. for allegedly conspiring to monopolize trade in mild tranquilizers. Carter makes Miltown and American Home puts out Equanil, both containing meprobamate.)

Jan. 28 -- Rep. John A. Blatnik (D Minn.) said the American Medical Assn. in 1958 had tried to hamper an inquiry into the drug industry by his House Government Operations Legal and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee. The AMA immediately denied Blatnik's allegations.

Jan. 29 -- T.F.D. Haines, president of CIBA Pharmaceutical Products Inc., said that Serpasil, a CIBA tranquilizer and blood pressure drug, was "reasonably priced" at a cost to the patient of "$1.35-$2.25 per month." He said CIBA had worked for seven years to get the drug on the market. Haines' testimony wound up the tranquilizers phase of the Subcommittee's drug inquiry.

Feb. 23 -- Dr. Austin Smith, president of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Assn., said Government restraints on the industry would "inevitably slow the flow" of drugs. He said drug prices rose 3 percent in the last 10 years while the average wholesale price of all industrial products rose 22 percent.

Frederick L. Thomsen, also from the Association, said manufacturers' average profit per retail dollar paid for drugs was "roughly 6 percent" and if the entire profit were wiped out buyers of consumer drugs "on the average would hardly notice the difference in prices."

Feb. 24 -- John Blair, the Subcommittee's chief economist, presented figures from a 1958 report based on 51 drug products which he said represented two-thirds of all prescription drugs. He said in 27 cases 100 percent of all production was by one company; in seven more it was limited to two; and in nine it was limited to three.

Smith said the figures only showed "the companies are producing what is needed." (He later issued a statement calling Blair's report "grossly misleading".)

Feb. 25 -- Dr. Haskell J. Weinstein, director of a California chest hospital and former research director for a New York drug manufacturer, Charles Pfizer & Co., said physicians had been almost "brainwashed" to think of drug trade marks and that "even new disease states have been invented to encourage the use of some drugs...."

Dr. Martin A. Seidell, associate medical director of Riker Laboratories in California and a former Pfizer Co. medical director, said in a prepared statement that he had resigned his job with Pfizer because of the firm's "perverted marketing attitude ".

The Pfizer Co. in a Feb. 25 statement denied the criticisms of Weinstein and Seidell and said it was "worth noting" that Seidell resigned "only after his assistant received a promotion to which Dr. Seidell thought he was entitled himself."

Feb. 26 -- Chairman Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) in a concluding statement said it seemed clear that "on occasion the conflicts between a drug company's advertising people and its own doctors has not been resolved clearly and explicitly in favor of the position taken by the doctors...this is intolerable." He said absence of "clearcut authority" for medical men over advertising claims could cause confusion and danger to patients' health and that drug manufacturers should see to it that their code of ethics on this point was "observed rigorously" or "Congress or an agency of Government will do it for them."

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Feb. 29 -- The Supreme Court, in a 6-3 decision, reinstated charges that Parke, Davis & Co. had violated the Sherman Antitrust Act by conspiring to fix prices of its drug store products in areas without fair trade laws. The ruling reversed a June 1958 U.S. District Court action dismissing the case.

GOP OPPOSITION

The hearings, which had recessed at the end of February, reopened on a partisan note as Republican Committee members resumed their objections to investigating techniques used by Kefauver.

Dirksen April 7 released a statement protesting witnesses selected by Kefauver. He said that although Kefauver had promised to call representatives of the American Medical Assn., he had not done so and that it was not an objective approach to call individual doctors rather than the president of their association.

Dirksen and Sen. Roman L. Hruska (R Neb.) April 12 released separate statements which said doctors called by Kefauver were known antagonists of the drug industry. Hruska said he not only wanted to be fair to the drug industry, but to the public as well and added that "unless this Subcommittee mends its ways thoroughly -- and quickly -- it shall have failed" in its trust. Testimony:

April 12 -- William F. Bean of the Iowa State Medical College said some drugs put on the market were "acclaimed as the latest and best cure," but too often resulted in disappointment and disillusionment. He said "the problem is with companies whose sole concern is business" and which operated on the assumption that the richest earnings occurred when a new drug could be "marketed before competing drugs can be" released. Bean added, however, that "modern medicine owes a tremendous debt to the pharmaceutical industry" for developing new drugs.

Hans Popper of Mount Sinai Hospital, New York City, said some newly developed wonder drugs had caused jaundice. He said the evidence of the disease usually was apparent only after the drugs had been in use for some time.

April 13 -- A. Dale Console, former medical director of Squibb Laboratories, said the industry was forcing "relatively worthless" drugs on the market with high pressure sales programs. He said it was a fallacy "to conclude drug advertising and promotion is education" even though a testimonial was written by a doctor and "given an additional cloak of respectability" by a scientific journal. Console said unless sweeping reforms were instituted, a truly ethical drug house could not survive in the "present competitive wrangle". He said pressure for the reforms probably would have to take the form of restrictive legislation.

April 14 -- Dr. James E. Bowes, Salt Lake City physician and teacher at the University of Utah, said Congress should eliminate the "bulk rate" category in postage rates and make drug concerns pay first-class rates in order to reduce the heavy promotional mailings by drug manufacturers. He said he had surveyed 100 doctors and found 64 percent of them immediately dropped almost all drug circulars in the waste basket. Bowes said he had collected and weighed all drug advertisements and samples he received in the mail in one year and they weighed more than 365 pounds.

Dr. Chauncey D. Leake, Ohio State University drug expert, said "physicians in general should be skeptical of the descriptions of new drugs offered by pharmaceutical manufacturers in flamboyant brochures or advertisements." He opposed any greater Government regulation of the drug industry and said "free men should regulate themselves".

April 15 -- Dr. Solomon Garb, associate professor of pharmacology at the Albany, N.Y., Medical College, said a college study of drug advertising showed the majority of mailed ads were unreliable and with most, "a physician trusting them could be seriously misled". He said continuous federal inspection of all drug manufacturing and warehouse facilities, such as "the type now used for meats", would insure pure drugs. He also called for revision of trademark laws to ban use of newly coined names as product names.

April 20 -- Dr. Austin Smith, president of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Assn., said in prepared testimony that the Government did not provide enough staff to inspect drug manufacturing plants more than once every five-and-one-half years. Lack of proper inspection, he said, meant doctors sometimes were reluctant to prescribe some less costly brands of medicine because they did not trust the companies' inspection systems. Smith also said the Subcommittee had used charts and graphs that were "grossly misleading" in showing growing monopolistic tendencies by drug firms. Smith said the 140 members of his organization produced 95 percent of all prescription products on the market, that these companies insisted on good safeguards and that over the past six years only four to 10 actions per year had been taken against these firms by the Food and Drug Administration. Actions against non-members totaled 139 to 203 annually, he said, since these were companies with inadequate safeguards that produced cheaper drugs.

ORAL ANTI-DIABETIC DRUGS

April 26 -- Chairman Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), opening a new phase of hearings on oral anti-diabetic drugs, praised the Upjohn Co. of Kalamazoo, Mich., for its three-year research program with a new drug, Orinase, before introducing it to the market. He said, however, the Justice Department should investigate the "highly restrictive" agreement by which Upjohn was licensed as the exclusive United States manufacturer and seller for the drug, discovered by a German firm and officially named tolbutamide. Kefauver said it was estimated that Orinase sales brought Upjohn about $20 million annually.

Dr. E. Gifford Upjohn, president of the firm, said his company had not abused its rights to handle Orinase, that he doubted he would sell any of it to a competitor "at this particular time", but that any American company could manufacture and sell it and settle financially later with the winner of a dispute over U.S. patent rights between the German firm, Farbwerke Hoechst, and another company whose name was not disclosed. Upjohn said the average price of Orinase to the patient was 12½ cents a dose, and he figured this was about the same as the cost of insulin, taken by injection.

John Blair, Subcommittee chief economist, said the price of Orinase to the druggist in the U.S. was higher than anywhere else in the world, that while the "computed production costs" for 1,000 tablets, were $13.11, the cost to the druggist was $84.30 and the cost to the consumer was $139.

Upjohn said he had checked and found five countries had a higher price than that charged American druggists for Orinase, and that Blair's figures were not "anything like the cost" because they did not include such items as plant overhead costs, administration and taxes. He said the company did not keep separate records of profit or loss in individual items.

April 27 -- Dr. Henry Dolger, chief diabetes specialist at Mount Sinai Hospital, New York, said in prepared testimony that the Food and Drug Administration in 1958 approved the sale of Diabinese, the trade name for chlorpropamide, an oral diabetes drug manufactured by Charles Pfizer & Co., after "some 2,000 case reports" were submitted by Pfizer that included 43 deaths and a number of instances of jaundice in clinical tests. (Dolger later told newsmen only eight of the deaths could be traced to the drug.)

John E. McKeen, Pfizer's president, said Dolger had made "a very serious misstatement of facts", and he presented a testimonial from 36 doctors who said "the incidence of serious side-effects is sufficiently low that the drug can be appropriately used in properly selected patients with the proper dosage."

Dr. George J. Hamwi, professor of medicine at Ohio State University, said he knew of only four deaths that could be related to the drug and "after very careful study of these cases it was concluded all might have been avoided" with proper use.

Dr. Alexander Marble, specialist at the Joslin Diabetic Clinic in Boston, said there was need for an "unbiased" review of all new drugs after their general release.

Drs. Roberts M. Rees and Robert C. Warner of the Pfizer Co. staff contested Dolger's testimony and said company tests of Diabinese showed only 29 known jaundice cases out of 60,000 treated.

April 28 -- Dirksen forced delay in the hearing when he blocked the unanimous Senate consent required for the Committee to meet during a Senate session. He said the Subcommittee, composed mainly of men who were lawyers by profession, seemed an unlikely group to explore the disputed safety and efficacy of an oral diabetes drug, Diabinese. Dirksen said he would demand a closed session for "laying out some better guidelines."

McKeen made public a letter to Kefauver questioning whether the hearings had entered an improper area. He said his company endorsed an April 27 proposal by Dr. Alexander Marble, Boston diabetes specialist, for a study of new drugs by some scientific forum.

May 3 -- Dr. Samuel D. Loube, former president of the Washington, D.C., Diabetic Society, said he considered Diabinese "valuable" for treating some patients but that it could have serious side effects. He said the Pfizer Co. had distributed widely medical literature telling the entire story of the drug but he wished the drug industry generally would use more self-restraint in its advertising.

Dirksen again forced the hearing to recess by refusing in the Senate to give unanimous consent for its meeting. Kefauver told the hearing that Dirksen "misunderstands the issue," and that the main question was not whether one drug was better than another but whether the producers of Diabinese had made excessive claims in advertising.

(Dirksen inserted in the Congressional Record a May 2 letter sent to Kefauver by Dr. James M. Moss, director of the Georgetown University Diabetic Clinic, which said "careless testimony" on Diabinese April 27 by Dr. Henry Dolger "has created undue anxiety among patients with diabetes." Moss said some patients had discontinued the drug and "do not plan to return to the physician who prescribed" it, and that Kefauver would "be directly responsible for the irreversible deterioration of the health of these unfortunate victims of a chronic disease." Moss said the only person qualified to decide on medication for a patient was "the physician who has examined the patient and who has studied the literature containing the reports of the experiences of other physicians.")

May 4 -- Kefauver submitted a report from the Food and Drug Administration stating that an October 1958 letter sent by Pfizer along with a brochure to every doctor in the country announcing the marketing of Diabinese "contained misleading comparisons" with other oral diabetes drugs. The report said FDA "strongly rebuked" Pfizer both for the letter and for failing to clear its text with the agency "because of the importance of the drug and great risk" of introducing it.

McKeen denied the letter was misleading, said it had not been cleared with FDA because of a misunderstanding but the matter later was "satisfactorily cleared up" and an FDA-approved letter was sent out.

PRESCRIPTION PRACTICES

May 10 -- Dr. Charles O. Wilson, Oregon State College School of Pharmacy, said the Subcommittee could do a great service by "bringing some order into the nomenclature of pharmaceuticals". He said some of the names coined by the drug companies indicated ingredients in their preparations that were lacking.

May 11 -- Dr. August H. Groeschel, New York City Hospital, said he thought the National Pharmaceutical Council (composed of 22 large drug firms) had been waging a campaign of "continual harassment" to prevent non-profit hospitals from saving money by dispensing drugs under scientific names rather than brand names. Groeschel said the $500,000 a year his hospital spent on drugs would have been 25 percent higher if only brand-name medicines had been bought.

Dr. Mildred E. Brady, Consumers Union, said Congress should close loopholes in inspection laws.

May 12 -- Thomas D. Rowe, dean of the University of Michigan College of Pharmacy, opposed proposals that Congress enact laws to require or encourage the prescription of drugs by their medical names. He said evidence about possible savings if doctors would give their patients a choice among similar medicines, instead of prescribing by trade name, had been exaggerated.

Dr. Harold F. Pierce, former medical director of the Connecticut State Welfare Department, said federal laws should be revised to give the Food and Drug Administration more authority to investigate drug production. He said patents on drug products raised their prices and should be abolished, but patents on methods of production should be retained.

Dr. Walter Modell, associate professor of Pharmacology at Cornell University, said drug naming had become so confusing that the same drug might be known by 25 or more different trade names.

May 13 -- Dr. Lloyd C. Miller, revision director for Pharmacopeia of the United States, a private agency which sets federal drug standards, said federal inspection was so inadequate that it was unsafe to prescribe medicines without knowing the manufacturer was reliable.

Newell Stewart, National Pharmaceutical Council, opposed any system encouraging doctors to prescribe by generic names if this would allow druggists a wide latitude in the use of ingredients they considered identical.

WELCH INQUIRY

May 17 -- The Subcommittee began hearings on alleged conflict of interest activities of Dr. Henry Welch, director of the Food and Drug Administration's Antibiotics Division.

Arthur S. Flemming, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, submitted a statement saying HEW in 1959 reviewed Welch's activities as an editor and contributor to several large medical publications and a partner in a medical publishing company. Flemming said as a result of the review, he Oct. 14, 1959 announced a new policy governing outside activities of Department employees and ordered Welch to discontinue certain publishing activities. Flemming said that as of January 1960 Welch had "assured" the Department that he had complied.

May 18 -- Committee investigators said that Welch, in addition to his annual Government salary of $17,500, received $287,142.40 from outside medical publishing jobs, most of which were connected with promotion outlays by drug companies.

Flemming the same day asked for Welch's "immediate resignation". Flemming said Welch had "deliberately misled his superiors" and "we should have thoroughly investigated his statements to us". Welch resigned May 19, but denied any wrongdoing.

June 1 -- Dr. Gideon Nachumi, a resident physician at Kings County, N.Y., Hospital, said that in 1956, while writing advertising copy for the Charles Pfizer & Co. drug manufacturing firm, he had helped "jazz up" a scientific speech by Welch "to bring out the sales points" of Sigmamycin, a new antibiotic introduced by Pfizer. Nachumi said the speech did not include the drug's trade-name but mentioned its ingredients; incorporated a slogan chosen for the drug, "A Third Era in Antibiotics", and used the term "synergistic" to describe its power. Synergism is a quality that gives two drugs combined more strength than both separately, and Nachumi said Pfizer had planned to stress in its advertising that Sigmamycin was the first of the synergistics on the market. He said at the time he felt there was nothing improper in his editing but he since had noted medical authorities disputed claims for the drug and he now considered the editing "an abuse" of Welch's position.

Subcommittee investigators introduced documents showing that Pfizer bought $23,183 worth of ads for Sigmamycin in Welch's medical publications, with Welch receiving about $1,700.

June 2 -- Dr. Barbara Moulton, who resigned in February after serving for five years on the FDA's Bureau of Medicine staff, said the FDA had lost most of "the crusading spirit it once possessed and has become... merely a service bureau for industry." Drug company aides had ready access to FDA technicians passing on their applications for new products and private talks "are the rule rather than the exception," she said. She told of frustrating personal attempts to take off the market or prevent release of what she felt were worthless or dangerous drugs and said her resignation came after the FDA's New Drug Division released two new food additives without consulting its own medical department and just after she had finished gathering evidence that one -- folic acid -- was unsafe.

Dr. Ernest King, FDA's former associate medical director, disagreed with Dr. Moulton's testimony and said FDA employees "have the public interest at heart or they wouldn't be there." He said no one ever tried to make him release a drug against his judgment.

June 3 -- Flemming said he asked Dr. Detlev Bronk, president of the National Academy of Sciences, to appoint a group of top-level non-Governmental scientists to review all decisions made by Welch, and that he was setting up a special FDA investigative unit to check charges against specific individuals, and possible conflicts of interest. Flemming disputed Dr. Moulton's testimony on folic acid and said the drug actually had been kept off the market on her recommendation. (For reports by these groups, see below)

Flemming proposed legislation to provide that: FDA test samples of all antibiotics; drug manufacturers be required to report to FDA all cases of injuries produced by approved drugs, instead of leaving the report optional; FDA inspectors be permitted to examine manufacturers' controls on drug purity and to see complaint files which they now are barred from inspecting.

Reviewing the Welch case, FDA Commissioner George P. Larrick said he did not know until May 18 that Welch got "a fixed percentage of drug advertising and of reprints sold by the outside medical journals he had edited."

Larrick proposed that FDA be given authority to check effectiveness as well as safety before approving new drugs.

June 6 -- Kefauver criticized Flemming and his aides for failure to question Welch's outside income. Flemming said it was primarily a matter of "misplaced confidence" in a trusted scientist who had been with FDA for 22 years. He said Welch at all times had said he got only "an honorarium" from the magazines he edited.

Flemming referred to his June 3 announcement on an investigative unit for FDA and said the "principal" members would come from outside HEW.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- June 7 -- The Subcommittee made public letters from Welch's private files showing he had solicited reprint orders for his magazine ventures from drug firms.

June 15 -- Kefauver introduced a bill (S 3677) to require HEW licensing of drug manufacturers, pharmacists and others making or selling drugs for use in interstate commerce. The bill also required the Food and Drug Administration to evaluate new drugs for their efficacy as well as safety.

Kefauver said that "facts in the record" of Subcommittee hearings on the drug industry proved the need for "some legislation" to safeguard the public even before Subcommittee hearings ended. However, there was no subsequent action on the bill in 1960.

Flemming announced appointment of a Special Investigative Unit to look into allegations against employees and procedures in the Food and Drug Administration. Three chief members of the group were Charles H. Kendall, general counsel of the Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization, director of the special unit; Charles Austin Doan, dean of the Ohio State University School of Medicine; and William A. Costello, a regional inspector of the Internal Revenue Inspection Service.

June 24 -- Flemming announced that a Special Advisory Committee of eight medical professors had been appointed by Dr. Detlev Bronk to review policy, procedure and decisions of the FDA Division of Antibiotics and New Drug Branch when headed by Welch. The eight were Drs. C. Philip Miller, University of Chicago, chairman; John H. Dingle, Western Reserve University; Maxwell Finland, Harvard University; Colin M. McLeod, N.Y.U.; Karl F. Meyer, University of California; John R. Paul, Yale University; Carl F. Schmidt, University of Pennsylvania; and Wesley W. Spink, University of Minnesota.

July 1 -- Flemming sent to Congress a proposal (S 3815, HR 12949) for amendment of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act of 1938 to tighten federal control over drug manufacturing. In a letter accompanying his proposal, Flemming said the Administration had not yet completed a full study of the Flemming suggestions.

The Flemming plan required drug manufacturers to keep records of the clinical effects of new drugs and submit reports on them to the HEW Department. It also required controls adequate for public safety in drug-making and packaging, and extended federal certification to all antibiotics (existing regulations covered only insulin and some antibiotics).

There was no action on the bill in 1960.

ANTIBIOTIC DRUG PRICES

The hearings in September focused on the price of antibiotic drugs, and at the end of the month were recessed until 1961. A Subcommittee spokesman in December said testimony still was to be heard from representatives of the American Medical Assn. and related groups on general practices in the drug industry. He said an interim report was being readied and probably would be released in January 1961.

Sept. 7 -- Kefauver said the Subcommittee had "persuasive evidence" from the cost-production reports of certain drug companies which indicated they had exercised monopolistic control over drug prices. He said the companies included Lederle Laboratories of the American Cyanamid Co. and Bristol Laboratories, both of New York City and Parke, Davis and Co. of Detroit. Kefauver said the three companies had sold a particular drug at the same price level for nearly 10 years, but recently, apparently because of the Subcommittee's investigations, had reduced its price by 15 percent.

W.G. Malcolm, president of the American Cyanamid Co., said Lederle Laboratories aimed for a 12 percent to 15 percent profit after taxes, but that the profit in recent years had been "slightly in excess of 15 percent."

Sept. 8 -- Rear Admiral William L. Knickerbocker, executive director of the Military Medical Supply Agency, the largest purchaser of drugs for the Federal Government, said the MMSA in some instances had received what it considered "non-competitive prices" from U.S. drug firms which had forced MMSA to buy drugs from foreign concerns. He said U.S. companies had refused to adjust their prices regardless of the quantity of drugs purchased and that in one instance purchases from Farmochimica Cutolo-Calosi, an Italian firm, at about one half the price of the lowest bid by an American firm, had saved the Government over $1 million.

Lyman Duncan, manager of Lederle Laboratories, said Italian drug companies "steal" U.S. researched drugs and processing techniques and then with cheaper labor undersell the U.S. product. Italian firms had advertised for U.S. technicians to offer their services as consultants, Duncan said. He said the firms promised to keep the arrangement confidential -- an "open invitation to our own employees to steal our secrets and turn them over to the Italians."

Sept. 9 -- Philip I. Bowman, president of Bristol Laboratories, said the company's earnings in 1959 were 8.4 percent of total sales and that throughout its existence the company had put nearly $2 into research for every dollar of profit. Bowman's statement was made in reply to evidence presented by Subcommittee investigators that Bristol Laboratories in 1956 had reported a 67.7 percent net profit before taxes on drug sales to the Government. Bowman added that research was the cornerstone of the drug industry and that for "every $20 million of industry research expenditure" one major antibiotic was developed. Elimination of patents in the drug field would force many small firms out of business, permitting the larger firms to take over the market, Bowman said, and added that "patents are a small firm's -- and the public's -- best friend."

Sept. 12 -- Dr. Maxwell Finland of the Harvard Medical School said an impartial national board was needed to evaluate new drugs because there was too great a lag between the time a new drug went on the market and its proper evaluation through use.

Harry J. Loynd, president of Parke, Davis and Co., said sales, advertising, research, taxes and profits nearly doubled the production cost of Chloromycetin which the Subcommittee had said gave the company a 16 percent profit on sales when based on the cost of the drug excluding those items. Under questioning, Loynd said that his company bought about one-tenth of its output from an Italian firm for $1.52 a bottle and that it eventually sold for about $51 per bottle.

Sept. 13 -- Eugene N. Beesley, president of Eli Lilly and Co., said his firm had lowered prices on antibiotics by as much as 94 percent over the past 10 years.

Sept. 14 -- Dr. Harry F. Dowling of the Univ. of Illinois College of Medicine, said drug advertising should be more strictly controlled. He said physicians needed more facts and that misleading advertisements had caused doctors to make mistakes in prescribing the drugs.

FDA Reports, Rules

WELCH CASE

The Special Advisory Committee authorized in June by Flemming and appointed by Dr. Detlev Bronk Sept. 27 submitted a report, released to the public with Flemming's comments Oct. 6, on its investigation of Welch's decisions and FDA policies and procedures in general. The report said that, "taking into account the limitations of the FDA's authority, funds, and scientific personnel, the Committee found the decisions it reviewed acceptable, despite certain deficiencies in the quality and quantity of the data upon which they were based." The Committee said it "found no evidence of disregard for the public health," but that "certain weaknesses inherent in the existing law and current staffing and budgetary support hamper the FDA in its task of protecting the public health."

The report said it would have been impossible to review, in any reasonable period, even a portion of the "thousands of voluminous applications for certifiable antibiotic preparations and new drugs," so it had selected 29 applications considered to be of "especial significance". They covered three preparations of certifiable antibiotics, 14 of antibiotics classed as new drugs and 12 of other new drugs.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The Committee recommended that the FDA be given statutory authority to: require proof of the efficacy, as well as safety, of all new drugs; require manufacturers of new drugs to keep records and submit reports of clinical experience both before and after release of the drug, with evaluation subject to revision; apply certification procedures to all antimicrobial agents for use in infectious diseases. It also endorsed strengthening factory inspection authority, more complete labeling of drugs and better coordination of the supervision of labeling, promotional material and other drug advertising. The Committee said FDA staff members processing applications "should be supported to the utmost in their efforts to obtain submission of truly dependable scientific information," and that "the data initially submitted by the manufacturer are not always of sufficient quality and quantity to permit a sound decision as to the merits of the product." It also urged establishing an advisory group of scientific and technical experts to advise on FDA procedures and policies. The Committee said FDA's present resources were "less than adequate," both in funds and personnel, to meet existing responsibilities.

(The New England Journal of Medicine Aug. 11 charged Congress with being "unreasonably deaf to any pleas for a decent regulation" of the drug industry and said Congress had "crippled" the FDA by not providing it with enough money and power to police manufacturers adequately.

(It said Congress has been "pouring millions upon millions of dollars into medical research but (has been) unreasonably deaf to any pleas for a decent regulation of some of the results of that burgeoning business."

(Congress in fiscal 1960 appropriated $400 million to the National Institutes of Health, a large part of the sum being earmarked for medical research. Appropriations to the FDA during the same period totaled $13.8 million.

(The journal criticized Congress for refusing to grant an FDA request in 1953 for "a comprehensive factory inspection law that would permit it to make reasonable investigations, including a look at a company's formula, personnel and complaint files." It said makers of prescription drugs had favored such a law, but Congress had yielded to pressure from the Proprietary Assn. (patent medicine manufacturers) and the National Retail Druggists Assn.)

FDA STAFF INVESTIGATION

The Special Investigative Unit headed by OCDM General Counsel Charles H. Kendall Oct. 31 reported that, "on the basis of all the evidence before us, it is our judgment that there are no present employees of FDA whose sources of personal income are incompatible with their Government employment." The report said analysis of all of the unit's investigation had not been completed, but it was expected it would "demonstrate the possibility of organizational or procedural improvements."

NEW DRUG LABELING REGULATIONS

The FDA Dec. 9 announced new regulations requiring changes in labeling used to promote the sale of prescription drugs to physicians. FDA said the purpose was to insure that such labeling disclosed both the hazards and advantages of the drugs. Regulations requiring full information for use would become effective March 9, 1961, with other required changes effective Jan. 8, 1961.

Major labeling changes included these requirements: labels of drugs for injection must give quantity or proportion of all inactive, as well as active, ingredients; labels of prescription drugs must bear identifying lot or control numbers for determination of manufacturing history; any labeling of prescription drugs or devices including promotional literature mailed or given physicians by company representatives must include data on any relevant hazards and on conditions for non-use; for new drugs, information on use, dosage, hazards and contra-indications must be substantially that contained in applications for marketing the drug; labeling on uses and dosage must show the date of issuance or latest revision.

Changes in regulations to assure safety of new drugs provided: permission to market could be denied on refusal of a manufacturer to allow inspection of methods, facilities or controls; applications for marketing could be made conditionally effective pending verification by inspection of adequacy of manufacturing methods.

ECONOMIC STUDIES

The economic and fiscal policies of the Eisenhower Administration were sharply criticized in two reports issued by the Joint Economic Committee early in 1960. The first was the product of a lengthy study of the possibilities of reconciling the goals of substantially full employment, an adequate rate of economic growth, and substantial price stability. The inquiry was proposed by Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) shortly after the 1958 Congressional elections. It was paid for with funds ($200,000) authorized in a March 23, 1959 resolution (S Con Res 13). (For background, see 1959 Almanac p. 724)

The second report was the Joint Committee's annual review of the President's Economic report.

Providing a sharp contrast to the views of the Democratic members of the Joint Economic Committee was the final report of the Cabinet Committee on Price Stability for Economic Growth, headed by Vice President Richard M. Nixon, issued April 17.

Employment and Growth

The Joint Committee Jan. 26 filed a report on its 10-month "Study of Employment, Growth and Price Levels" (S Rept 1043). To no one's surprise, the Committee split along party lines.

DEMOCRATIC VIEWS -- Nine of the Committee's 10 Democrats signed the 61-page majority report, which followed closely an earlier report prepared by the Committee's staff. (See this volume p. 627) Sen. J. W. Fulbright (D Ark.) took no part in the study. Rep. Wright Patman (D Texas) appended 10 pages of "supplemental views." Principal findings and recommendations of the majority were as follows:

Economic Growth -- Blame for the low rate of growth in recent years -- estimated at an average of 2.3 percent per year from 1953 to 1959 -- was traced to the 1953-54 and 1957-58 recessions. These in turn were traced to Administration policies in cutting back defense orders, and keeping the supply of credit too tight, in an effort to curb inflation which, the report said, the Administration assumed was caused primarily by "generally excessive money demand." In fact, however, the Democrats said recent inflation resulted from instability of output, concentrations of market power, and the rising cost of services, none of which could be controlled by general monetary restraint. For the future, "our economy can grow at a rate as high as 4.5 percent per year without changing our economic system in any fundamental way," but this would depend on "whether public and private economic policies are adopted which facilitate growth."

Fiscal Policy -- "Federal fiscal actions have been a major cause of economic instability," the majority said. It recommended:

- Larger budget surpluses in periods of prosperity; "to the extent that these surpluses reduce consumption, they increase the total amount of resources available for investment."
- Changes in defense orders "should be treated as signals that offsetting changes in taxes or other expenditures" may be needed to reduce strains on the economy.
- Tax reduction should be the principal weapon in heading off recessions, but "should automatically end when the forces of recovery become strong."
- Other "automatic fiscal stabilizers," particularly the unemployment insurance system, should be strengthened.
- Tax loopholes, which "distort the use of resources," should be eliminated. Listed as the most urgent tax reforms were repeal of the dividends-received credit and exclusion, withholding on interest and dividend payments, limits on expenses accounts, limits on the types of income to which capital gains treatment was given, progressive reduction of the oil and gas depletion allowance, improvement in tax enforcement, and elimination of estate and gift tax preferences. These revisions would yield $4 billion to $5 billion more a year.

Monetary Policy -- Federal Reserve actions since the 1951 accord with the Treasury have been "excessively restrictive." To do its job properly, the Reserve should:

- Abandon its "bills only" policy by occasionally absorbing longer-term Treasury securities without trying to "peg" their prices.
- Expand the money supply at a higher rate, relying for the purpose on open-market operations rather than reductions in reserve requirements.
- Be given standby legislative authority to regulate consumer credit.

Debt Management -- The majority recommended against removal of the 4.25 percent ceiling on Treasury bond interest rates "in the absence of major reform." Among the steps proposed were:

- Efforts to increase competition in the Government bond market, by relying less on the advice of the American Bankers Assn. and by extending the use of auctions from bills to longer-term issues.
- Sale of long-term bonds when interest rates are low; the Treasury's purpose "should be to get the best possible bargain for the people of the United States."
- Issuance of more callable bonds to permit the Treasury to refinance the debt when interest rates drop.
- Issuance of "some savings bonds which are adjusted to changes in the price level."

Economic Structure -- The majority recommended these steps to improve the structure of the economy, in the interests of greater competition and stability:

- Reducing the exercise of "market power" by big business and big labor, chiefly through a strengthened antitrust program. But the antitrust laws, the majority said, could not be used to deal with labor unions.
- An annual labor-management conference, which "might have a good effect on prices and wages."
- Standby authority for the President to invoke "a fact-finding procedure in key price, and associated wage, increases which seriously threaten economic stability."

REPUBLICAN VIEWS -- An 18-page report signed by the Joint Committee's six GOP members took issue with most of the majority's conclusions respecting the Administration's fiscal and monetary policies since 1953:

Potential Growth -- The 4.5 percent figure cited by the majority was "simply slick statistical prestidigitation," since none of the Committee's 100 witnesses had supported the idea that "a target growth rate should be aimed at." In the final analysis, the growth rate would be determined by a host of individual choices.

Fiscal Policy -- The Republicans agreed that there was need for a big budget surplus in good times, for stronger automatic stabilizers, and for a thorough overhaul of the "chaotic federal tax system." They also agreed with the Democrats that "too much of the stabilization job has been dumped into the lap of monetary policy." But the Republicans expressed doubt that tax cuts could be made sufficiently automatic to stabilize the economy during recession.

Monetary Policy -- The minority argued that the reforms in Federal Reserve operations proposed by the majority should be left up to "the monetary authorities." Credit controls, they said, were "too highly controverted a subject" to be considered lightly.

Debt Management -- Refusal of the Democrats to endorse removal of the Treasury interest-rate ceiling, pending major reforms, was labeled "political blackmail." Nevertheless, the GOP members said some of the reform proposals "merit careful study and consideration."

Economic Report

The Committee again split along party lines in its Feb. 29 report (S Rept 1152) on the President's Economic Report, transmitted to Congress Jan. 20. (See p. 627) In fact, the conclusions reached by the Democratic majority and by the Republican minority were restatements of opposing views first set forth in the Committee's Jan. 26 reports.

The majority concluded that the President's "status quo" budget and Economic Report were inadequate to meet economic growth objectives. The Administration's own estimate of a $510 billion gross national product in 1960 "would be $20 billion to $30 billion below the economy's potential output," and implied that unemployment would average close to 5 percent for the entire year. Blame for this was attributed to the Administration's "undue emphasis on fighting inflation" at a time when the general price level promised to remain stable through 1960.

The majority then repeated its earlier recommendations for changes in federal economic policy by:

- Reordering budget priorities, by such steps as eliminating waste in defense procurement, applying production controls on price supports for corn, and cutting business subsidies, while channeling more funds to education and research.
- Closing "the most flagrant and inequitable loopholes" in the tax law, which could add $4 to $5 billion to federal budget receipts.
- Easing monetary and credit conditions by allowing the money supply to "increase over time at about the same rate as gross national product, allowing for normal velocity" in the turnover of money, and by reforms in Federal Reserve and Treasury debt management practices.
- Curbing the growth of business and labor "market power" by more vigorous antitrust action, an annual labor-management conference, and standby authority to review "key price and associated wage increases which seriously threaten economic stability."

As with the Jan. 26 report, the Committee's GOP members disputed the majority's criticism of Administration policies, rejected some of its recommendations, and questioned why others had not been adopted when Democrats had remained in control of Congress for five years. They accused the majority of "continuing its now-discredited numbers game" respecting the economy's rate of growth since 1953, and of "trying to apply their depression economics to the problems of the 1960s."

Regarding tax reform, the minority said: "Is it realistic of the majority to suggest that under the present Senate and House leadership the percentage depletion allowance for oil is going to be changed?" GOP members also defended the dividend credit, which the majority recommended repealing, as "a very incomplete and modest attempt to equalize the incidence of taxation on risk capital." The minority agreed that rising unemployment was a serious matter, but pointed out that "rapid technological advancement brings in its wake increased frictional unemployment."

Sen. J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) did not sign the majority report; additional views were recorded by Rep. Wright Patman (D Texas), and Sens. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), John Marshall Butler (R Md.), Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) and Prescott Bush (R Conn.). Bush said the majority had "written a campaign document for...1960."

Nixon Committee

The Cabinet Committee on Price Stability for Economic Growth April 17 made its final report.

Taking inflation as its focus, the Committee rendered a glowing account of the Administration's success in curbing price rises since 1953 and painted an optimistic outlook for price stability in the future. In contrast to its first report in June 1959, which emphasized the incipient threat of further inflation, the second report bore all of the earmarks of a confident campaign document. (1959 Almanac p. 725) According to the Nixon Committee:

- "Inflation has been effectively curbed during the past year", the consumer price index having risen only 1.5 percent.
- From the beginning of 1952 to the beginning of 1960, the index rose by 11 percent -- two-thirds of it occurring between 1956 and 1958. Even this increase "is probably an overstatement of the true rise in consumer prices," since the index did not reflect improvements in quality.
- Although many persons "are today suffering severe hardships from inflation", that inflation "is almost entirely" the product of the pre-Eisenhower period. Nearly 90 percent of the rise in prices since 1939 took place before 1952.
- "We can have reasonable price level stability and sustained economic growth in the 60s if we continue to pursue the general policies of the past few years but improve the effectiveness with which we execute these policies."

The Committee noted, however, that there is little prospect that prices will drop. "If we avoid major economic contractions, as there is every reason to expect, we shall have eliminated what has historically been one of the chief deflationary forces in our economic life. With brief, mild contractions some individual prices will decline, but the general price level is likely to fall little... The economy will have an inflationary bias unless we limit upward general price movements in recovery and expansion."

The Committee denied that the record "supports the notion that appropriate monetary and fiscal policies to control inflation have stunted or will stunt our economic growth." Parenthetically, the report dismissed Democratic claims that growth has slowed down under the Eisenhower Administration, with the argument that "only a single period, 1948 to 1957, meets the requirements for a meaningful measurement of growth." During this period, gross national product increased at an average rate of 3.8 percent per year.

In conclusion, the Committee asserted that "the record of the past eight years, considering all factors -- healthy growth, reasonable price stability, and over-all economic performance -- is as good or better than that of any comparable previous period."

AIR FORCE MANUALS

The disclosure early in 1960 that the Air Force had issued two manuals that linked U.S. clergymen to Communism and a third pamphlet instructing enlisted men in dog-washing and bartending provoked a controversy which resulted in the withdrawal or revision of two of the manuals and investigations by two House committees.

The statements on Communist infiltration of American churches were made in two Air Force publications -- a training manual for reserve personnel entitled "Reserve Non-Commissioned Officer Course, Student Text, Individual and Group Defense" and a manual for active duty personnel called "Guide for Security Indoctrination."

The training manual and security guide were released Jan. 4 by the Lackland (Texas) Air Force Base Military Training Center. In both documents the charge was made that pastors of certain churches were card-carrying Communists and that 30 of the 95 persons who worked on the Revised Standard Version of the Bible, under the sponsorship of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., were affiliated with "Communist fronts." The reservists' training manual also described as "foolish" the theory that Americans have the "right to know" about Government activities.

The charge against the clergy was an echo of similar attacks made by J.B. Matthews in a July 1953 issue of the American Mercury magazine which said, "The largest single group supporting the Communist apparatus in the United States is composed of Protestant clergy." (1953 Almanac p. 340)

Matthews, who was executive director of the late Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy's (R Wis. 1947-57) Government Operations Permanent Investigations Subcommittee from June 22, 1953 until his resignation July 9, 1953, had also served as research director of the House Un-American Activities Committee from 1938 to 1945. His 1953 charges in the American Mercury had drawn immediate fire from the National Council of Churches of Christ, from prominent Protestant clergymen, and later from President Eisenhower.

Enlisted men working in officers' households received a manual of instructions on their duties, including advice on how to mix drinks, make beds and wash dogs.

Before the existence of the "dog-washing" manual was revealed in February 1960, Assistant Secretary of Defense Charles C. Finucane said Aug. 14, 1959 that neither the Army or the Air Force were using enlisted men as houseboys, babysitters or chauffeurs for officers. Finucane told the House Armed Services Manpower Utilization Subcommittee that he knew of "no such fraudulent use of manpower...and if we knew it, we would stop it."

Under fire from the National Council of Churches of Christ and from Congress, Air Force Secretary Dudley Sharp ordered the Lackland training manual withdrawn Feb. 17. The household guide for enlisted men was withdrawn earlier in 1960, and it was reported Feb. 27 that an Air Force pamphlet stating that military racial integration had hurt the armed forces had also been withdrawn. The Air Force did not cancel the security guide.

Support for the controversial manual came from the American Council of Churches, a Protestant fundamentalist group, whose leader, the Rev. Dr. Carl T. McIntire, Feb. 24 asked Sharp to reinstate the manual.

The manual and security guide were written by Homer H. Hyde, a civilian employee of the Air Force at the Lackland base. At a press conference Feb. 19 Hyde said that he had based his statements on information published by the Un-American Activities Committee, a pamphlet published by the Circuit Riders Inc., an organization of Methodist laymen, and the radio-television broadcasts of evangelist Billy James Hargis of Tulsa, Okla. The 90 "Communist or pro-Communist projects" named in the manual as "fronts" with which clergymen had been affiliated were listed first in the Circuit Riders pamphlet, published in Cincinnati by M.G. Lowman. Of the 90, 17 appeared on the Attorney General's list of subversive organizations and nine of the 17 were no longer operating.

Un-American Activities Hearings

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 25 -- Air Force Secretary Dudley C. Sharp said the training manual had been withdrawn after protests by the 35-million member National Council of Churches of Christ because mention of individuals and groups was improper (though he said it was proper in the security guide) and because of "objectionable statements...which could be misinterpreted and get the Air Force into difficulty." Sharp said, "I don't think we (Sharp and Secretary of Defense Thomas S. Gates Jr.) apologized" to the NCCC, as had been reported in the press.

When asked if he repudiated training manual church and Communism statements drawn from House Un-American Activities Committee materials, Sharp said: "I have no reason to doubt that they were authentic although actually I have not checked in detail to find whether the statements were accurate."

Sharp said the statement in the manuals that Americans should not have the "right to know" about certain Government activities was criticized out of context. He was unaware, he said, of any promises for revision of the security guide, despite a statement Feb. 23 by an Air Force spokesman that it would be. Sharp said the training manual would be reissued without mention of names or organizations. (Gates Feb. 19 ordered a review of all armed service manuals.)

(Committee Chairman Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) after the hearings said he interpreted Sharp's statement on the authenticity of the training manual information as saying the charges in it were true. Later the same day, Sharp said Walter's interpretation was incorrect and did not comment on whether the charges were true or false.)

Armed Services Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Armed Services, Manpower Utilization Subcommittee.

TESTIMONY -- March 10 -- Air Force Secretary Sharp said that the failure to review adequately the withdrawn training manual before distribution was "inexcusable", and that the manual was "highly unappropriate". Sharp said, however, that the Air Force would continue to warn servicemen of Communist activity in the Nation's churches. He said a revised security manual was being written.

Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Thomas D. White said, "We intend to clean up this problem and set our house in order," and stressed that manuals on appropriate subjects were valuable.

Chairman Melvin Price (D Ill.) March 11 said, "You've got to give them (Sharp and White) credit for a frank and honest admission that they goofed."

Kennedy Wins 1960 Presidential Election In Closest Race of the 20th Century

Democratic Presidential nominee John F. Kennedy Nov. 8 defeated Vice President Richard M. Nixon, the Republican nominee, in the closest Presidential election of the 20th Century, The largest number of votes in history, 68,838,565, was cast.

Final returns as of Dec. 19 (the day the electoral college met) for all but one state (Hawaii) showed:

DEMOCRATS -- Kennedy and his running mate, Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), carried 22 states with 300 electoral votes. The ticket put together a coalition of Eastern and Central industrial states and traditionally Democratic Southern states that was sufficient to win, despite loss of almost the entire West and Midwest and several Southern states. Popular vote, including the latest figures available for Hawaii, was 34,221,463 -- a margin of only 112,881 over the Nixon-Lodge ticket. In the electoral college balloting Dec. 19, the Kennedy-Johnson ticket received 300 electoral votes (269 required for election).

REPUBLICANS -- Nixon and his running mate, former Ambassador to the United Nations Henry Cabot Lodge, carried 26 states with 220 electoral votes. The ticket ran strongly in the West and Midwest and also carried several Southern and border states. Popular vote, including the latest figures available for Hawaii, was 34,108,582. In the electoral college balloting Dec. 19, the Nixon-Lodge ticket received only 219 votes because one Oklahoma delegate, Henry D. Irwin, who was elected as a Republican, cast his vote Dec. 19 for Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) instead of for Nixon.

UNPLEDGED ELECTORS -- One state, Mississippi, gave its electoral mandate to a slate of unpledged electors. These and other unpledged electors (in Alabama and Louisiana) won 609,870 popular votes and elected 14 independent electors (Mississippi, 8; Alabama, 6). Compilation of the popular vote total for unpledged electors (and for Kennedy) was complicated by the fact that in Alabama, voters were required to vote separately for each of the state's 11 electors, with the electors grouped under party designations but no indication given, for the 11 persons running as Democrats, that five were pledged to Kennedy and six unpledged. The highest vote for any of the five Kennedy-backers chosen as electors was 318,303; the highest for any of the six unpledged Democrats elected, 324,050. In computing Kennedy's national vote total (see above), CQ credited him with 318,303 for Alabama, even though the figure covered many voters who also voted for the six unpledged electors. Similarly, in computing the national total for unpledged electors, CQ included 324,050 from Alabama even though many of these voters also voted for Kennedy. The Alabama total vote therefore appears larger than it actually was. To correct this, in computing the total national vote for Kennedy, Nixon, unpledged electors and minor parties combined, CQ has included for Alabama only the highest vote received by any elector (324,050) in Alabama.

In the electoral college balloting Dec. 19, all the 14 unpledged electors, plus Irwin of Oklahoma, cast votes for Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va., giving him 15 electoral votes.

MINOR PARTIES -- In addition to the independent electors, minor parties ran candidates in various states (for names of parties and candidates, see p. 824). Total vote for minor parties combined throughout the U.S. was 216,953.

HAWAII -- Nixon originally was thought to have carried Hawaii, but a recount in process at the time the electoral college met left the result in doubt and Hawaii's three electoral votes undetermined.

TOTAL VOTE -- Under the method explained above, the total vote for Kennedy, Nixon, unpledged electors and minor parties combined was 68,838,565. Of this, Kennedy received 49.7 percent; Nixon received 49.5 percent; unpledged electors, nine-tenths of 1 percent; and minor parties, three-tenths of 1 percent. (The percentages total more than 100 percent because of the Alabama duplication.) Of the Kennedy-Nixon vote alone, Kennedy received 50.1 percent, Nixon 49.9 percent.

Precedents

Not since 1888 had the victorious Presidential candidate received less than 51 percent of the two-party popular vote. In that year, Grover Cleveland (D) received 50.45 percent of the popular vote, but the electoral vote was won by Benjamin Harrison (R).

In defeat, Nixon received more votes (34,108,582) than President Eisenhower won in his first race for the White House in 1952, 33,778,963. Eisenhower received 35,579,190 in 1956.

Asked to give one important reason for the outcome, Republican National Chairman Thruston B. Morton pointed to an apparently low vote for Nixon among Negroes. Democratic National Chairman Henry M. Jackson placed great importance on the four television debates between the candidates.

Kennedy became the first Roman Catholic to be elected to the Presidency and, at 43, the youngest man ever elected President.

The Republican National Committee, examining the close vote, announced Nov. 10 that Republican National Chairman Thruston B. Morton had asked state and county party chairmen to look into allegations of voting irregularities in several states. A Committee spokesman said many complaints alleging fraud, payment of money and other irregularities had been received by the Committee.

Complaints had come mostly from Texas, North and South Carolina, Illinois, Michigan and New Jersey, he said.

For a while between Nov. 8 and Dec. 19, when the electoral college met, there was speculation that if Illinois' 27 electoral votes were lost to Kennedy (through proof of vote irregularities), reducing his electoral votes to 273 (only four more than the 269 minimum needed for victory), Southern electors might bolt and withhold votes from the Kennedy-Johnson ticket, throwing the decision into the House of Representatives. However, the Illinois electoral board (four Republicans, one Democrat) Dec. 14 certified the 27 Democratic electors from the state. Gov. William G. Stratton (R), chairman of the board, said he would not have hesitated to withhold certification of the Democratic electors on a "showing of overwhelming fraud," but "I don't feel this showing has been made here (before the board) today."

Cabinet Chosen

President-elect Kennedy announced his Cabinet selections on the following dates:

Dec. 1 -- Gov. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.) 1955-61) to be Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare.

Dec. 2 -- David E. Bell, Harvard economics professor and former administrative assistant to President Harry S. Truman (D), to be Budget Bureau director.

Dec. 3 -- Gov. Luther H. Hodges (D N.C. 1954-61) to be Secretary of Commerce.

Dec. 7 -- Rep. Stewart L. Udall (D Ariz. 1955-61) to be Secretary of Interior.

Dec. 12 -- Dean Rusk (D), Rockefeller Foundation president and former Deputy Under Secretary of State (1949-50) and Assistant Secretary of State (1950-52), to be Secretary of State.

Dec. 12 -- Ex-Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson (D Ill. 1949-53), twice the Democratic nominee for President, to be Ambassador to the United Nations with Cabinet rank.

Dec. 13 -- Ford Motor Co. President Robert S. McNamara, an independent, to be Secretary of Defense.

Dec. 15 -- Arthur J. Goldberg, special counsel to the AFL-CIO, to be Secretary of Labor.

Dec. 15 -- Gov. Orville L. Freeman (D Minn. 1955-1961) to be Secretary of Agriculture.

Dec. 16 -- C. Douglas Dillon (R), Under Secretary of State, to be Secretary of the Treasury.

Dec. 16 -- Robert F. Kennedy (D), the President-elect's brother and campaign manager, and former chief counsel of the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field, to be Attorney General.

Dec. 17 -- J. Edward Day (D), Los Angeles insurance executive, to be Postmaster General.

Other major appointments were Michigan Gov. G. Mennen Williams (D 1949-61), named Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs Dec. 1; Rep. Chester W. Bowles (D Conn.), named Under Secretary of State Dec. 12; and Byron White, Denver, Colo., attorney, named Deputy Attorney General Dec. 16.

National Vote for President

Shown below is the final, official popular vote for electors pledged to John F. Kennedy (D), Richard M. Nixon (R) and minor-party and unpledged slates in the Nov. 8, 1960 Presidential election. Votes in brackets under "Others" were for unpledged electors; remaining votes under "Others", for minor parties. The 14 unpledged electors (Miss., 8; Ala., 6) cast their electoral college votes Dec. 19 for Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.). Other electoral votes were cast as indicated. With a popular vote recount under way, status of Hawaii's three electoral votes was undetermined Dec. 19.

Congressional Elections

DEMOCRATS MAINTAIN MAJORITIES, REPUBLICANS GAIN

Democrats maintained their heavy majorities in the Congress and among the Nation's Governors in the Nov. 8 election, but Republicans were able to make some important gains, especially in the House of Representatives.

Republican gains, taking place in the face of a victory for Democratic President-elect John F. Kennedy, appeared due in part to the return of normally Republican seats to the GOP to offset the serious losses suffered by Republicans in the 1958 Democratic sweep.

The continued heavy Democratic Congressional majority, especially in the Senate, made it appear unlikely that Republicans would be able to regain control of the Congress at any time during President-elect John F. Kennedy's first term in the White House.

Republican weakness at the state level appeared to be reflected in GOP inability to approach the Democratic Governorship total. Republicans captured six Democratic governorships in the Nov. 8 election, but lost seven of their own for a net loss of one.

(For additional information, see this volume, p. 759-61 for Senate races; p. 762 for Governor races; p. 763-68 for House races.)

Gains and Losses

The summaries below show changes in party alignments as a result of the Nov. 8 election. Changes as a result of deaths and resignations after the election are not computed into totals.

Senate

	Democrats	Republicans
Previous lineup	66	34
Not up in 1960	43	23
At stake in 1960	23	11
Net result- 1960	minus 2	plus 2
New lineup	64	36

SWITCHES -- The switches were in Delaware and Wyoming, where Democratic seats went to the Republicans. The GOP suffered no Senate losses, despite advance predictions of possible trouble for incumbents in Colorado and South Dakota. Republicans withstood the Kennedy tide in Massachusetts and New Jersey. Democrats were able to hold on to their seats in Minnesota, Missouri, Michigan and Montana, where Republican challengers ran energetic campaigns.

House

In the Nov. 8 election, the GOP picked up a net of 21 House seats, making the party lineup 262 Democrats, 175 Republicans and no vacancies. On the basis of Members elected Nov. 8, the following was the House situation for the 87th Congress: Election of one Member, George O. Chambers (R Ind., 5th District) over Rep. J. Edward Roush, was contested and final determination left to the House itself. Chambers on this page and elsewhere in this volume is counted as elected.

	Democrats	Republicans
Previous lineup	283	154
Pickups- 1960	8	29
Net result- 1960	minus 21	plus 21
New lineup	262	175

SWITCHES -- Democrats gained seats in these states: California (1); Idaho (1); New Jersey (1); New York (3); Utah (1); and Washington (1). Five of the Democratic pickups occurred in Districts where the Republican incumbent had died or announced his retirement; three constituted defeats of Republican incumbents.

Republicans gained seats in these states: California (1); Colorado (1); Connecticut (2); Indiana (5); Iowa (1); Kansas (2); Maine (2); Maryland (1); Minnesota (1); Missouri (1); Montana (1); Nebraska (2); North Dakota (1); Ohio (2); Oregon (1); Pennsylvania (2); South Dakota (1); Vermont (1); and Wisconsin (1). Seven of the Republican victories occurred in Districts where the Democratic incumbent had died, retired or lost in the primary; 22 constituted defeats of Democratic incumbents. In 20 Districts Republicans regained seats they lost in the 1958 Democratic landslide.

Congressional Analysis

In contrast to most Presidential elections, the victory of the national Democratic ticket did not appear to play an important role in most Congressional contests. If "Kennedy coattails" existed at all, they were probably evident in New York state, which he carried by a wide margin and where three incumbent GOP Congressmen were defeated; in Connecticut, where Democrats held two close seats; and in New Jersey, where one Republican seat went Democratic. All other Democratic House gains appeared to be the result of special local conditions. Kennedy's election victory appeared to have played a negligible role in the 1960 Senate races.

The most important Republican Congressional gains came in the Midwest where Nixon ran a strong race. Widespread and deep-seated anti-Catholic sentiment, combined with a marked "cooling off" of the farm issue which hurt Midwestern Republicans so badly in 1958, appeared to form the basis of much of the increased Republican Midwestern strength in both Presidential and local races.

Many Republican gains, through Midwestern farm states but also in Connecticut, Maine, Ohio, Vermont, Oregon and Pennsylvania, seemed to mark the return to the GOP fold of traditionally Republican Congressional Districts which had gone Democratic in 1958 in a temporary protest against Republican policies.

THIRTY-FOUR SENATORS ELECTED NOV. 8

Thirty-four Senators were elected Nov. 8, with Republicans making a gain of two seats while holding all of their own seats up for reelection. (For list of Senators elected, see p. 760-61)

Twenty-three Democratic seats were up for reelection as against 11 Republican seats. Republican victories in Delaware and Wyoming reduced the Democratic Senate lead from 66-34 at the end of the 86th Congress to 64-36, not counting deaths and resignations after election day.

Only one incumbent Senator, J. Allen Frear Jr. (D Del.), lost his bid for reelection. Frear lost to Delaware Gov. J. Caleb Boggs (R).

Only six non-incumbents were elected to the Senate. Boggs was one. In Iowa, Jack Miller (R) was elected to fill the seat of retiring Sen. Thomas E. Martin (R); Rep. Lee Metcalf (D) was elected in Montana to fill the seat of retiring Sen. James E. Murray (D); Maurine B. Neuberger (D) was elected in Oregon to succeed Sen. Hall Stoner Lusk (D) who held the seat by appointment after the death of Mrs. Neuberger's husband, the late Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D); Claiborne Pell (D) was elected in Rhode Island to fill the seat of retiring Sen. Theodore Francis Green (D); and in Wyoming Rep. Keith Thomson (R) was elected to succeed retiring Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D).

Thomson died, however, Dec. 9, and a special election to choose a successor was scheduled for November 1962. To fill the seat until then, Gov. J.J. Hickey (D) Dec. 22 said he would resign and be appointed Senator by Secretary of State Jack Gage (D) when the latter moved up to Governor.

In addition to non-incumbents elected, Sen. Edward V. Long (D Mo.) was elected Nov. 8 for the remainder of the term, expiring in January 1963, of Sen. Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D), who died Sept. 13. Long had been appointed Sept. 23, pending the special election. His appointment gave him seniority over all other new Democratic Senators elected Nov. 8, including Mrs. Neuberger, who became a Senator Nov. 9, having been elected both to a short term (Nov. 9-Jan. 3, 1961) and a six-year term.

President-elect John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) Dec. 22 resigned his Senate seat, expiring in January 1965. Democratic Gov. Foster Furcolo (leaving office in 1961) said he would appoint Benjamin A. Smith II (D) to the seat pending a special election in November 1962.

Vice President-elect Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) said he would resign his Senate seat (to which he was reelected Nov. 8) some time before inauguration Jan. 20, 1961. Texas Gov. Price Daniel (D) said he would appoint former-Sen. William A. Blakley (D Texas, 1957) to the seat pending a 1961 special election.

The anticipated changes would make the Senate lineup 65 Democrats, 35 Republicans, and give Texas and Wyoming a Democratic Governor and two Democratic Senators; and Massachusetts a Republican Governor and one Senator from each party.

State Lineups

Excluding Wyoming, Massachusetts and Texas (discussed above), the 87th Congress was scheduled to have 33 states in which the two Senators would be members of the same party (10 Republican and 23 Democratic).

Solid Republican -- Delaware, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New York, South Dakota, Vermont.

Solid Democratic -- Alabama, Alaska, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia.

Divided -- Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Maine, New Jersey, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Utah, Wisconsin.

Senate Balance

Senate seats that become vacant because of deaths or resignations are usually filled temporarily, pending an election, by appointment by the Governor of the state involved. If the Governor is of a different party from that of the dead or retiring Senator, he may appoint a member of his own party, thereby changing the Senate party lineup. Such a sequence of events in 1961 would be possible in 22 states (excluding Massachusetts, Wyoming and Texas, discussed above).

In 13 of the states, there was a Democratic Governor and a Republican Senator or Senators:

State	Senator	Age in 1961
California	Thomas H. Kuchel	50
Colorado	Gordon Allott	53
Connecticut	Prescott Bush	63
Delaware	J. Caleb Boggs	52
	John J. Williams	57
Illinois	Everett McKinley Dirksen	65
Indiana	Homer E. Capehart	64

	Roman L. Hruska	56
New Jersey	Clifford P. Case	56
North Dakota	Milton R. Young	64
Pennsylvania	Hugh Scott	59
Wisconsin	Alexander Wiley	76

In the remaining nine states, there was a Republican Governor and a Democratic Senator or Senators:

State	Senator	Age in 1961
Arizona	Carl Hayden	83
Hawaii	Oren E. Long	72
Idaho	Frank Church	36
Maine	Edmund S. Muskie	47

SENATE MEMBERSHIP IN THE 87th CONGRESSS

Democrats 65, Republicans 35

(Includes changes explained in Notes 1, 2 and 3)

1 — Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), the President elect, resigned his Senate seat Dec. 22. State Gov. Foster Furcolo (D) said he would name Benjamin A. Smith II (D) to fill the seat until a special election in November 1962 to choose a successor for the remainder of the term, expiring in January 1965.

2 -- Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D) Nov. 8 simultaneously was re-elected Senator from Texas and elected Vice President. Johnson was scheduled to resign from the Senate before inauguration day, Jan. 20; Texas Gov. Price Daniel (D) said he would appoint former Sen. William A. Blakley (D Texas, 1957) to Johnson's seat pending a special election in 1961.

3 -- Keith Thomson (R) Nov. 8 was elected to the Senate from Wyoming but died Dec. 9. Wyoming Gov. J.J. Hickey (D) Dec. 22 said he would resign as Governor and be appointed to Thomson's Senate seat.

Republicans Won	12
Governorships Switched Parties, D to R	6
Governorships Switched Parties, R to D	7
Freshman Governors	19
Incumbents Re-elected	8
Democrats Hold	34
Republicans Hold	16

Of the 27 gubernatorial races in 1960, Democrats won 15 and Republicans 12. The results gave the Democrats 34 Governors in 1961 as opposed to 16 for the Republicans. In the 1958 election the Democrats also got a total of 34 Governors, but the number slipped to 33 when Maine Republican State Senate President John H. Reed succeeded to the governorship after the death of Democrat Clinton A. Clauson. The highest total of Democratic Governorships was 39 in 1938.

Democrats replaced Republicans in Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Rhode Island, and West Virginia. In Illinois and Rhode Island they ousted incumbents. Three of the Democratic switches occurred in states where the following incumbent Republicans were barred by statute from succeeding themselves: J. Caleb Boggs of Delaware, Harold W. Handley of Indiana, and Cecil H. Underwood of West Virginia. (Boggs defeated the Democratic incumbent in the Delaware race for the Senate; Handley retired; and Underwood was defeated in the Senate contest in West Virginia.) In North Dakota, Republican Gov. John E. Davis had been defeated by Democrat Quentin N. Burdick June 28 in a contest to fill the seat of the late Sen. William Langer. It was then too late for Davis to run again for the governorship, and his would-be GOP successor was defeated.

Republicans replaced Democrats in Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Mexico, and South Dakota. In Kansas, Minnesota, New Mexico, and South Dakota the GOP defeated Democratic incumbents. (In Iowa, Democratic Gov. Herschel C. Loveless, who was eligible for reelection was the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for the Senate. In Massachusetts, Democratic Gov. Foster Furcolo was defeated by Thomas J. O'Connor in the Democratic Senatorial primary and thus was unable to make another try for the governorship.)

Three Democratic Governors were constitutionally barred from succession, but, unlike the Republicans, were replaced by members of their own party: Leroy Collins of Florida, James T. Blair Jr. of Missouri, and Luther H. Hodges of North Carolina. In Vermont, Republican Governor Robert T. Stafford won a seat in the House of Representatives.

The 15 states where Democratic Governors won: Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Missouri, North Carolina, North Dakota, Rhode Island, Texas, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Indiana, Michigan, Nebraska and Washington.

The 12 Republican wins were in: Arizona, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Montana, New Hampshire, Utah, Vermont, New Mexico, Minnesota, and South Dakota.

Republicans Won	12
Governorships Switched Parties, D to R	6
Governorships Switched Parties, R to D	7
Freshman Governors	19
Incumbents Re-elected	8
Democrats Hold	34
Republicans Hold	16

Of the 27 gubernatorial races in 1960, Democrats won 15 and Republicans 12. The results gave the Democrats 34 Governors in 1961 as opposed to 16 for the Republicans. In the 1958 election the Democrats also got a total of 34 Governors, but the number slipped to 33 when Maine Republican State Senate President John H. Reed succeeded to the governorship after the death of Democrat Clinton A. Clauson. The highest total of Democratic Governorships was 39 in 1938.

Democrats replaced Republicans in Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Rhode Island, and West Virginia. In Illinois and Rhode Island they ousted incumbents. Three of the Democratic switches occurred in states where the following incumbent Republicans were barred by statute from succeeding themselves: J. Caleb Boggs of Delaware, Harold W. Handley of Indiana, and Cecil H. Underwood of West Virginia. (Boggs defeated the Democratic incumbent in the Delaware race for the Senate; Handley retired; and Underwood was defeated in the Senate contest in West Virginia.) In North Dakota, Republican Gov. John E. Davis had been defeated by Democrat Quentin N. Burdick June 28 in a contest to fill the seat of the late Sen. William Langer. It was then too late for Davis to run again for the governorship, and his would-be GOP successor was defeated.

Republicans replaced Democrats in Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Mexico, and South Dakota. In Kansas, Minnesota, New Mexico, and South Dakota the GOP defeated Democratic incumbents. (In Iowa, Democratic Gov. Herschel C. Loveless, who was eligible for reelection was the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for the Senate. In Massachusetts, Democratic Gov. Foster Furcolo was defeated by Thomas J. O'Connor in the Democratic Senatorial primary and thus was unable to make another try for the governorship.)

Three Democratic Governors were constitutionally barred from succession, but, unlike the Republicans, were replaced by members of their own party: Leroy Collins of Florida, James T. Blair Jr. of Missouri, and Luther H. Hodges of North Carolina. In Vermont, Republican Governor Robert T. Stafford won a seat in the House of Representatives.

The 15 states where Democratic Governors won: Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Missouri, North Carolina, North Dakota, Rhode Island, Texas, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Indiana, Michigan, Nebraska and Washington.

The 12 Republican wins were in: Arizona, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Montana, New Hampshire, Utah, Vermont, New Mexico, Minnesota, and South Dakota.

NEWCOMERS TO OFFICE AND SEATS THAT SWITCHED PARTIES

HEADNOTES

[1] -- Retired
[2] -- Died
[3] -- Ran for Senate
[4] -- Ran for House
[5] -- Ran for Governor
[6] -- Ran for another state office
[7] -- Defeated in primary
[8] -- Cannot succeed himself

Seven freshman Senators, 19 freshman Governors and 63 freshman Representatives were elected Nov. 8. Winners and losers are listed below. In cases where the loser was not the incumbent, the incumbent is listed in parenthesis.

Dots denote seats in which the voting resulted in a switch of parties. In the House, Republicans picked up 29 seats previously held by Democrats and the Democrats picked up 8 seats previously held by the GOP. The victory of George O. Chambers (R Ind.) was being contested.

In the Senate, Republicans picked up 2 Democratic seats and held all their own seats.

Republicans took 6 governorships from the Democrats, while the Democrats picked up 7 governorships.

CLOSE PRIMARY RACES

Listed below are the incumbent Senators and Representatives who had close primary elections in 1960 -- won by 65 percentage or less of the votes cast. Six of the incumbents were defeated by their primary opponent but one was renominated when his successful opponent died. In some cases, incumbents faced more than one opponent in the primary; where that occurred, only the opponent who received the largest percentage of votes cast is listed and the total does not add to 100 percent.

ELECTIONS WEAKEN LABOR IN CONGRESS

The Nov. 8 general elections apparently weakened labor's strength in Congress.

Even though it failed to put a Republican in the White House, the GOP did succeed in cutting down on the Democratic margin in both the House and Senate. Most of the seats picked up by the Republicans came at the expense of Democrats who, according to the Committee on Political Education of the AFL-CIO, either had supported labor's position or would vote with labor if elected.

COPE, the political arm of the AFL-CIO, shortly before the elections evaluated the voting records of the Members of the 86th Congress. COPE selected 10 key roll-call votes taken during 1959 and 1960 to judge Members of the House.

COPE and its affiliates of the AFL-CIO also contributed money to the election campaigns this year of many candidates for the House and Senate, mostly Democrats.

Using COPE's voting study and the AFL-CIO spending reports to label candidates "pro" and "anti" labor, this picture emerges from the House elections:

	"Pro-Labor"	"Anti-Labor"	Unknown
Incumbents reelected	189	184	1
Newcomers elected	11	32	20
Total electees	200	216	21

(Note: John W. Davis (D Ga.) is counted as a recipient of labor money although he returned to the Textile Workers Union (AFL-CIO) $500 it contributed to him.)

This 200-216 deficit is in contrast to the 216-215 edge labor had in the House at the end of the 86th Congress. The 216-215 figure is derived from COPE's voting study. According to COPE, 216 Representatives voted "right" at least half the time they answered roll calls on the 10 COPE-selected issues during 1959-60. The other 215 Representatives voted "right" less than half the time. (Vacancies at the end of the 86th Congress and Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas), who rarely votes, bring the membership up to 437.)

Newcomers

The chart on the following page shows that COPE and 11 AFL-CIO affiliate unions contributed to the campaigns of 193 House candidates. With some races still contested, 106 of the labor-backed candidates won House seats. Of the 106, only 11 were non-incumbents. They were: James C. Corman (D Calif.); John W. Davis (D Ga.); Ralph R. Harding (D Idaho); Edward R. Finnegan (D Ill.); Richard Ichord (D Mo.); Arnold Olsen (D Mont.); Charles S. Joelson (D N.J.); Hugh L. Carey (D N.Y.); Fernand J. St. Germain (D R.I.); Julia B. Hansen (D Wash.); and M. Blaine Peterson (D Utah).

The following 32 freshman Representatives can be classified as "anti-labor" because the AFL-CIO gave campaign money to their opponents: Alphonzo E. Bell Jr. (R Calif.); John H. Rousselot (R Calif.); Peter H. Dominick (R Colo.); ex-Rep. Horace Seely-Brown (R Conn.); Abner W. Sibal (R Conn.); George O. Chambers (R Ind.); Richard L. Roudebush (R Ind.); ex-Rep. Earl Wilson (R Ind.); ex-Rep. Ralph Harvey (R Ind.); James E. Bromwell (R Iowa); Robert F. Ellsworth (R Kan.); Walter L. McVey (R Kan.); Garner E. Shriver (R Kan.); Stanley R. Tupper (R Maine); Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (R Md.); F. Bradford Morse (R Mass.); Clark MacGregor (R Minn.); Durward G. Hall (R Mo.); James F. Battin (R Mont.); Donald D. Clancy (R Ohio); William H. Harsha Jr. (R Ohio); Charles A. Mosher (R Ohio); John M. Ashbrook (R Ohio); Edwin R. Durno (R Ore.); William W. Scranton (R Pa.); J. Irving Whalley (R Pa.); George A. Goodling (R Pa.); Ben Reifel (R S.D.); Robert T. Stafford (R Vt.); Henry C. Schadeberg (R Wis.); Vernon W. Thomson (R Wis.); and ex-Rep. William Henry Harrison (R Wyo.).

The remaining 20 newly elected Representatives cannot be put down as either pro- or anti-labor since the AFL-CIO did not spend any money either for or against them in the 1960 campaign.

Senate

COPE rated Senators of the 86th Congress on 10 roll calls taken during the 1959-60 sessions. The study showed that 51 Senators voted "right" on at least half the selected votes. Voting "wrong" most of the time were 47 Senators. COPE did not rank Neuberger (D Ore.) and Burdick (N.D.).

The AFL-CIO came out of the Nov. 8 elections with 50 "pro-labor" Senators and 48 "anti-labor" Senators.

Not counting Senate seats held by President-elect John F. Kennedy and Vice President-elect Lyndon B. Johnson, here is the lineup resulting from the Senate elections:

	"Pro-Labor"	"Anti-Labor"
Incumbents reelected	12	15
Newcomers elected	4	2*
Total Electees	16	17
Not up in 1960	34	31

Teamsters

The plans of James R. Hoffa, president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, to wield his union as a political power suffered a setback in the 1960 elections.

Hoffa, in November 1959, announced that the Teamsters would work for the defeat of 56 Members of the House of Representatives. The 56 were singled out, Hoffa said, because they all had voted for the Landrum-Griffin bill and had been returned to the House in 1958 by margins of 5 percent or less of the vote in their districts. Of the 56, only 40 actually were actively opposed by the Teamsters in 1960 and 39 of these were reelected. Of the remaining 16, one was elected to the Senate, 5 retired and the other 10 were all reelected.

Net result: one defeat of the 56 opposed by the Teamsters: Francis E. Dorn (R N.Y.).

The Teamsters listed campaign contributions to 14 candidates for House seats. Of the 14, five were incumbents. The five incumbents -- Daniel K. Inouye (D Hawaii), Ralph J. Rivers (D Alaska), Chester E. Merrow (R N.H.), Daniel J. Flood (D Pa.) and Thor C. Tollefson (R Wash.) -- were reelected, but the nine non-incumbents supported by the Teamsters all were defeated. All ran against members of the "56 Club".

Recipients of Labor Money in 1960 Election

The Federal Corrupt Practices Act requires political committees to file reports with the Clerk of the House showing to whom they contributed campaign money. Congressional Quarterly checked the spending reports of major labor groups filed between Jan. 1 and Nov. 8, 1960. The reports surveyed were those of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, United Auto Workers (AFL-CIO), United Steelworkers of America (AFL-CIO), International Assn. of Machinists Non-Partisan Political Action League (AFL-CIO), Sheet Metal Workers International Assn. (AFL-CIO), Communications Workers of America (AFL-CIO), International Ladies Garment Workers Union (AFL-CIO), Oil Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union (AFL-CIO), Textile Workers Union of America (AFL-CIO), United Brotherhood of Carpenters (AFL-CIO), Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America (AFL-CIO), United Hatters, Cap and Millinery Workers of America (AFL-CIO), Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen's Political Education League (Independent), Railway Labor's Political League, an arm of the Railway Labor Executives Assn. (AFL-CIO), and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters (Independent).

The listing shows Congressional candidates who, according to the spending reports filed, received campaign money from any or all of the AFL-CIO affiliate unions, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, the Railway Labor Executives Assn., or the Teamsters.

Incumbents' names are underlined. An "X" beside a candidate's name indicates the group contributing to his campaign in 1960. Asterisks (*) denote candidates who lost.

†Note: John W. Davis (D Ga.) is counted as a recipient of labor money although he returned to the Textile Workers Union (AFL-CIO) $500 it contributed to his campaign.

1960 DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

Democrats Nominate Kennedy-Johnson Ticket, Adopt Strong Liberal Platform

New party leadership fought its way to power and reforged the traditional political coalition of North and South at the 33rd quadrennial National Convention of the Democratic party in Los Angeles, July 11-15.

John Fitzgerald Kennedy, 43-year-old Senator from Massachusetts, climaxed a long struggle by overcoming the opposition of some of the most powerful men in his party -- including former President Harry S. Truman -- to win 806 votes and the Presidential nomination on the first ballot July 13.

Kennedy was one of the youngest and one of the wealthiest men ever to be nominated for President, the first Senator nominated since Warren G. Harding (R) in 1920, and the first Catholic nominated since Alfred E. Smith (D 1928).

Kennedy pledged to stand squarely on the assertively liberal party platform drafted by his own foreign policy adviser, Rep. Chester Bowles (Conn.).

After winning the Presidential nomination, Kennedy chose as his Vice Presidential running mate Lyndon Baines Johnson, 51, Senator from Texas, Majority Leader of the U.S. Senate and a leader of the Southern and border states who was Kennedy's strongest opponent for the Presidential nomination. The Kennedy-Johnson ticket was the first in U.S. history composed of two incumbent Senators.

Many of the liberal Northern Democrats who had swung behind Kennedy to help him get the Presidential nomination objected to selection of Johnson for the Vice Presidency and to the new North-South coalition it represented. They said Johnson would hurt the ticket among minority and liberal groups in the North, particularly on the issue of civil rights, and that his nomination portended a probable conservative orientation in the new Democratic Administration if the ticket went on to victory.

Many, on the other hand, said the formation of the Kennedy-Johnson ticket recalled nothing so much as a similar and electorally successful coalition in 1932 between New Yorker Franklin D. Roosevelt and Texan John Nance Garner, then House Speaker.

At very least, the alliance with Johnson, a Southern Protestant, was expected to help Kennedy minimize some voters' objections to his Roman Catholicism, to hold the 146 electoral votes of the 13 Southern states safe for the Democrats in November and to remove from Senate leadership, if the ticket won in November, a potentially disgruntled and conservatively oriented rival for party leadership.

Most Democrats leaving Los Angeles appeared confident Kennedy and Johnson could defeat a GOP ticket headed by Vice President Richard M. Nixon. But a major question facing the party was how long a coalition seeking to combine the myriad economic and ethnic interests of the North could live in peace with the conservative counsels of the Southern Democracy.

In addition to nominating candidates, the convention adopted a liberal platform emphasizing economic growth, new foreign policy measures, expanded welfare programs and strong federal civil rights measures. Major events of the convention are described in detail below.

Keynote Address

The themes of the convention -- the primacy of public needs over private indulgence and the Administration's alleged failure to maintain U.S. international prestige and power and to develop the productive resources of the Nation to the fullest -- were set by Sen. Frank Church (Idaho) in his keynote speech as the convention opened July 11.

He said the national administration had "fallen into the hands of the hold-back party during the times that beseeched us to push ahead." Current U.S. prosperity, Church said, was not wholesome, but rather "the kind that results when Government is run by hucksters not unaccustomed to selling inferior products by wrapping them in bright packages."

U.S. economic growth since 1953 had been too slow, Church said, and "our urgent needs at home have been left untreated like festering sores." Church asked, "Are we to become a modern Babylon of public want amidst private glut?"

The Administration, Church said, had "staged" foreign policy "as though the world were a grandstand, where showmanship might be the easy substitute for statesmanship." He called for increased military outlays so that the U.S. could negotiate with the U.S.S.R. from a position of strength.

Church called on the convention to nominate a Presidential candidate who would "once again lift our country upon the highroad of destiny."

Credentials and Rules

Disputes over credentials and convention rules, which sparked major convention fights in previous years, failed to cause any serious difficulties in 1960.

Acting on recommendation of the National Committee, the Rules Committee July 11 presented to the convention a set of permanent rules including the compromise Loyalty Rule adopted in 1956. The rules were adopted without debate.

The only contest brought to the Credentials Committee concerned rival delegations from Puerto Rico. In reporting to the convention July 12, the Credentials Committee recommended and the convention by voice vote agreed that Puerto Rico's votes should be split between the two factions.

Threats previously made to challenge the credentials of Southern delegates who had openly supported the Republican ticket in the 1956 election, or who participated in the 1948 Dixiecrat revolt, failed to materialize.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM ADOPTED AFTER CIVIL RIGHTS FIGHT . . .

Platform

By voice vote July 12, the Democratic National Convention adopted the party's 20,000-word 1960 platform after heated battles within the Resolutions (Platform) Committee and on the convention floor over the strongest civil rights plank in the history of the party.

The platform promised increased federal action to stimulate economic growth, strengthen the U.S. position in world affairs and wipe out all forms of discrimination based on race, creed or color. (For full text of platform, see p. 776) Highlights:

PLATFORM HIGHLIGHTS

Disarmament -- To help break the deadlock on arms control "requires a national peace agency for disarmament planning and research."

Foreign Aid -- Military aid should be replaced by economic aid "as rapidly as security considerations permit"; at the same time, development programs should be placed on a "long-term basis to permit more effective planning."

Economic Growth -- The U.S. economy "can and must grow at an average rate of 5 percent annually." As a first step, "a Democratic President will put an end to the present high-interest, tight-money policy."

Welfare Programs -- Pledges included medical-care benefits for the aged under the Social Security system; federal aid for school construction, teachers' salaries, student loans and scholarships; "full parity" income for farmers; expanded federal aid to cities.

Taxes -- By closing loopholes and achieving a higher rate of growth, billions in additional revenue could be found without increasing rates; if higher taxes were needed, however, "we will not allow political disadvantage to deter us from doing what is required."

Civil Rights -- The platform called for federal aid to desegregated school districts, federal authority to file civil injunction suits to prevent the denial of any civil rights, and a federal Fair Employment Practices Commission. "The peaceful demonstrations for first-class citizenship which have recently taken place in many parts of this country are a signal to all of us to make good at long last the guarantees of our Constitution," the platform said.

BACKGROUND

The character of much of the platform, which represented a major victory for liberal Northern Democrats on most issues, was credited to Resolutions Committee Chairman Chester Bowles (Conn.).

Several months before the convention, Bowles began conferences on platform issues with party leaders and prospective Presidential nominees, including Kennedy, for whom Bowles served as foreign policy adviser in the preconvention period. Bowles also drew heavily on reports of various subpanels of the Democratic Advisory Council. Regional platform hearings were held by specially appointed subcommittees of the Democratic National Committee during the spring of 1960, and national platform hearings began in Los Angeles the week of June 27.

The actual drafting of the platform began a few weeks before the convention. In addition to Bowles, Thomas Hughes, Bowles' legislative assistant, and Abram J. Chayes of Harvard Law School reportedly participated in the drafting.

Before submission to the full 108-member Resolutions Committee, the platform was considered by a 20-member drafting group, which made few changes in the planks submitted by Bowles and his associates.

In a climactic nine-hour session of the full Resolutions Committee July 11, decisive votes were taken on platform sections opposed by conservative groups within the party:

- By a 66-28 vote, a plank was adopted recommending elimination of the national origins quota system for immigration. The voted followed an unsuccessful fight by Sen. James O. Eastland (D Miss.) to have the liberal immigration plank stricken from the platform.
- By a 66-22 vote, a farm plank calling for price supports at 90 percent of parity was approved. Opponents claimed the plank embodied the program of the National Farmers Union. A move to have the plank reconsidered was defeated, 32-38.
- The committee voted down a motion by Eastland to strike the repudiation of "right to work" laws from the platform.
- By a 66-24 vote, the disputed civil rights plank was adopted over Southern objections. Charles Bloch of Macon, Ga., a delegate from that state, told the committee: "At the behest of a well-organized minority... you are going to take the chance of driving out of the party the only states, practically speaking, which supported the party in 1952 and 1956." Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) called the plank "decidedly liberal" and said that "anything less might spell defeat and disaster for the party." Motions by Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (N.C.) to strike platform sections dealing with the Fair Employment Practices Commission, the permanent Civil Rights Commission, civil injunctions and desegregation in all schools by 1963 were defeated by voice vote before the 66-24 vote on final adoption. A compromise civil rights plank offered by Lewis A. McMurran of Virginia was ruled out of order.

The Southerners left the platform meeting with a statement of repudiation signed by delegates from nine states: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia. The statement said many provisions of the civil rights plank were unconstitutional and that "we do not propose to be bound by them."

PRESENTATION TO CONVENTION

Bowles presented the platform to the convention July 12, interspersing presentation of major sections with filmed illustrations of Democratic stands on foreign policy, domestic policy and human rights. Bowles read only highlights of the platform (about 4,000 words). Delegates applauded the strong civil rights plank.

James H. Gray, Georgia Democratic chairman, read the minority report prepared by the nine states which had signed the statement of repudiation earlier.

The Southern states, Gray said, "have been subjected to every conceivable harassment" and "a campaign of studied vilification" in a "calculated effort being made by radicals of both parties to drive the states of the South from the Democratic party." Gray called for an observance of constitutional guarantees of powers reserved to the states and said that "unlimited...ever-enlarging big-government control always corrupts and always de-humanizes." Gray said the Southern states "will not be bribed with 'technical and financial assistance,' held out as bait in this platform, into sacrificing their children upon the altar of political expediency."

Ervin moved that the majority civil rights plank be stricken from the platform, and was joined in speaking for the minority report by Govs. Ernest F. Hollings (S.C.), Ross Barnett (Miss.), J. Lindsay Almond (Va.) and Sen. Spessard L. Holland (Fla.). Holland said "ultra-liberal domination" and "well-meaning, socialistic reformers" were responsible for the majority civil rights plank.

Speaking for the majority plank were Philip B. Perlman (Md.), Patsy Takemoto Mink (Hawaii), Leif Erickson (Mont.), Dorothy G. O'Brien (Ill.), Sen. Philip A. Hart (Mich.) and Joseph L. Rauh Jr. (D.C.). Rauh said of the sitdown demonstrations, "Can we do less than let these heroic students know that we care?" Bowles, winding up for the majority, said, "We should do the things that are right because they are right."

Southern states did not demand a roll call on their minority report, which the convention then rejected by voice vote.

A minority amendment offered by McMurran, asking that a provision for reduction of the national debt on a planned schedule be written into the plank on fiscal responsibility, was opposed by Bowles and rejected by voice vote.

After 2 hours and 12 minutes of debate the convention adopted the platform by voice vote at 9:43 p.m. July 12.

Collins' Remarks

Florida Gov. Leroy Collins, in his July 12 opening remarks as permanent chairman of the convention, called on Democrats not to "look upon the American public interest as the sum total of its special interests and voting blocs," but to unite on principles which all Americans could endorse and to "make this the kind of convention the American people want it to be, the kind of convention which will make you proud to say in years to come, 'I was there.'"

Collins called on the convention to "proclaim to the people of the world, by what we say and do here, that America once again is the America they respected, an America committed to wage war on the very causes of war: colonialism, poverty, hunger, disease, ignorance, prejudice, wherever such exists throughout the world."

"The call to our party here and now," Collins said, "is to produce for our Nation a leader capable of again bringing Americans to their feet tingling with pride and glowing with courage -- not out of fear but out of faith in America and a better world for all."

Presidential Nomination

Sen. John F. Kennedy's victory in the race for the Democratic Presidential nomination seemed highly probable in the period preceding convention balloting, although late efforts by supporters of Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (Texas) and Adlai Stevenson appeared from time to time to have slowed the Kennedy juggernaut.

Johnson delayed formal announcement of his candidacy until July 5, and then announced his candidacy on a platform of "proven leadership". Johnson's problem was to establish a major beachhead of delegate support outside the South, which he was never able to do.

Stevenson never really entered the nomination race, but did encourage his backers July 8 by saying that if he were nominated he would campaign "with vigor and a sense of real purpose." Despite apparent widespread grass-roots support, the Stevenson candidacy was never organized to any great degree.

The campaign of Sen. Stuart Symington (Mo.) never appeared to have attracted major blocs of delegates to his cause. He announced his candidacy March 24.

Over a period of four years Kennedy built up an organization of determined young men, aided by some older professionals of the party, in a determined drive toward the nomination. He announced his candidacy formally Jan. 2. The drive bore fruit in seven primary victories throughout the spring and a steady movement of delegates to the Kennedy banner.

July 10, the day before the convention opened, Mayor Richard Daley of Chicago was able to deliver 59½ of Illinois' 69 votes to Kennedy. Gov. Edmund G. Brown (Calif.) declared for Kennedy, as did Govs. Herschel C. Loveless (Iowa) and George Docking (Kan.). At nightfall July 10 press association estimates put Kennedy's first ballot total at 620½, Johnson's at 273 (761 needed to win).

July 11, with balloting only two days distant, the key Pennsylvania delegation caucused and decided -- under the leadership of Gov. David L. Lawrence -- to cast 64 of its 81 votes for Kennedy. New York, with a total of 114 votes, began to add to the 91½ votes previously assured Kennedy. Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) released his 63½ votes, some of which drifted into the Kennedy camp. That night the estimated count stood at 688½ for Kennedy, 304½ for Johnson.

July 12 the Kennedy bandwagon lost some of its momentum. In a determined move to stop Kennedy, Johnson challenged him to a debate on the issues before a joint meeting of the Texas and Massachusetts delegations. When Kennedy appeared, Johnson used the opportunity to point out that Kennedy was absent from the Senate during much of the 1960 Senate debate on civil rights legislation. Johnson presented himself as the man best qualified to be "trustee for you and your children" in perilous times ahead. Kennedy responded by saying Johnson had made an excellent record as Senate Majority Leader and should be retained in that position.

In July 12 caucuses Kennedy failed to receive some of the new support he had anticipated. California delivered only 30½ votes (31½ for Stevenson), as a major revolt developed against Brown's leadership. Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota and New Jersey delegations did not switch

Democratic Presidential Balloting

The Democratic National Convention July 13 nominated Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) on the first ballot (761 votes needed to nominate) as its 1960 Presidential candidate. Following is the state-by-state tally before switches. The nomination was later declared to be by acclamation.

1. Alabama cast one-half vote for Gov. Orval Faubus (D).
2. California cast one-half vote for Gov. Edmund G. Brown (D).
3. Iowa cast 1½ votes for Gov. Herschel C. Loveless (D).
4. Kansas passed when its name was called in the balloting and did not vote till all other states and territories had finished.
5. Washington cast one-half vote for Gov. Albert D. Rosellini (D).

to Kennedy as expected. Nevertheless, his over-all estimated total rose to 743 votes (only 18 less than a majority).

On the morning of July 13, Kennedy lost a few votes in the Nebraska delegation, and Humphrey announced his support of Stevenson. (Humphrey Dec. 30, 1959 had announced his own candidacy for the nomination. He withdrew from the race May 11 after losing to Kennedy in the West Virginia Presidential primary.)

As the nominating session convened late July 13, however, Kennedy's nomination seemed inevitable.

NOMINATING SESSION

Johnson was the first candidate to be nominated, as Alabama yielded to Texas on the roll of the states. House Speaker Sam Rayburn (Texas) cited the great dangers to the Western world and said Johnson could furnish great national leadership. Following a 24-minute demonstration, Johnson's nomination was seconded by a Westerner, Gov. J.J. Hickey (Wyo.), a New Englander, Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (Conn.), and a Hawaiian, Rep. Daniel K. Inouye.

Alaska then yielded to Minnesota so that Gov. Orville L. Freeman could place Kennedy's name in nomination. Freeman presented Kennedy as "a man who is free from the commitments and cliches of the past" and could win the November election. Following a 23-minute demonstration, Kennedy's nomination was seconded by another politically heterogeneous group: Gov. Herschel C. Loveless (Iowa); Terry Sanford, North Carolina Democratic gubernatorial candidate; Rep. Edith Green (Ore.); D.C. National Committeeman-elect Frank Reeves; former Gov. Averell Harriman (N.Y. 1955-59); and Gov. J. Howard Edmondson (Okla.).

Arkansas then yielded to Florida so that Sen. Spessard L. Holland (Fla.) could place in nomination the first favorite-son candidate -- Sen. George A. Smathers (Fla.). Seconding speeches were made by Farris Bryant, Florida Democratic gubernatorial candidate, and Rep. Dante B. Fascell (Fla.).

Symington became the third major candidate to be nominated as Delaware yielded to Missouri and Gov. James T. Blair Jr. placed his fellow Missourian's name in nomination. Blair cited Symington's experience in the national defense field, called him "the answer to the Nation's prayer for leadership." Following a 24-minute demonstration, Symington's nomination was seconded by Reps. Emanuel Celler (N.Y.), Leonor Kretzer Sullivan (Mo.) and Charles C. Diggs Jr. (Mich.).

The next candidate nominated was Iowa favorite son Gov. Herschel C. Loveless. His name was placed before the convention by Rep. Merwin Coad (Iowa) and seconded by Rep. Neal Smith (Iowa). Following his nomination, Loveless gained the floor and withdrew his name in favor of Kennedy.

Kansas National Committeeman Frank G. Theis then placed another favorite son, Kansas Gov. George Docking, in nomination. After a seconding speech by Georgia Neese Clark, former Treasurer of the U.S., Docking gained the floor and withdrew in favor of Kennedy.

The last major nomination of the evening came when Kentucky authorized Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (Minn.) to nominate Stevenson. McCarthy's own Minnesota delegation could not give him the authorization, since Alaska had already yielded to Minnesota for Freeman's nomination of Kennedy.

McCarthy asked the delegates to put aside decisions they made earlier in the year and to allow a second ballot so that delegates could be freed from previous pledges and thus choose the man they really thought best qualified for the Presidency. Stevenson, McCarthy said, "did not seek power for himself in 1952 or 1956. He does not seek it today. Power sometimes comes to those who seek it, but history does not prove that power is always well used by those who seek it.... Do not reject this man who made us all proud to be called Democrats." McCarthy's speech set off the most tumultuous demonstration of the convention. Most of the enthusiasm during the 28-minute demonstration, however, appeared to be centered in the galleries and was reminiscent of the galleries' "We want Willkie" chants at the 1940 Republican National Convention. Seconds for Stevenson were made by Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y., ex-Gov. 1933-42, ex-Sen. 1949-57), Lt. Gov. Glenn Anderson (Calif.), and Lt. Gov. Wilson Wyatt (Ky.). Wyatt introduced Eleanor Roosevelt to speak for Stevenson, and she received the most careful attention the delegates had yet given any speaker in the convention.

Maine yielded to New Jersey so that Sen. Harrison A. Williams Jr. could place the name of favorite-son Gov. Robert B. Meyner in nomination. After a brief demonstration the nomination was seconded by Rep. Francis E. Walter (Pa.) and Pitt Tyson Maner of Alabama.

The last favorite-son to be nominated was Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett, his name placed in nomination by Delegate Tom P. Brady (Miss.). Brady was booed when he called civil rights legislation "Communist inspired". Barnett's nomination was seconded by Rep. William M. Colmer (Miss.).

As nominations were completed, Kennedy forces predicted confidently their man would be nominated on the first ballot.

The impending Kennedy victory was apparent as the first ballot progressed. Wyoming's 15 votes finally put him over the 761-majority mark at 10:51 p.m., July 13. The first ballot total, before switches:

Kennedy	806
Johnson	409
Symington	86
Stevenson	79½
Meyner	43
Humphrey	41½
Smathers	30
Barnett	23
Loveless	1½
Brown	½
Faubus	½
Rosellini	½
TOTAL	1,521

Votes were cast for Iowa Gov. Herschel C. Loveless, California Gov. Edmund G. Brown, Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus, Washington Gov. Albert D. Rosellini and for Humphrey even though their names were not formally before the convention. A Democratic convention rule adopted in 1920 and still in effect permitted delegates to vote for any person, whether his name was placed in nomination or not.

At the end of the first ballot, Missouri switched its 39 votes to Kennedy and then moved that Kennedy's nomination be made by acclamation. Collins declared the motion adopted.

The Vice Presidency

Following a day of conferences with Democratic party leaders Kennedy announced at 4:05 p.m. PDT July 14 that he had chosen Lyndon B. Johnson to be the candidate for Vice President.

Among other candidates considered for second place on the ticket were Sens. Stuart Symington (Mo.) and Henry M. Jackson (Wash.), as well as Govs. Orville L. Freeman (Minn.) and Herschel C. Loveless (Iowa).

CONVENTION ACTION

Alabama yielded to Pennsylvania on the roll of the states for Vice Presidential nominations and Johnson's name was placed before the convention by Gov. David L. Lawrence (Pa.), sparking a 7-minute demonstration.

There were reports from the floor of major dissatisfaction among Northern liberal groups over the choice of Johnson. Strongest objections came from the Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota and District of Columbia delegations, and the D.C. delegates decided to place Freeman's name in nomination until Freeman requested them not to do so.

Johnson's nomination was seconded by Rep. William L. Dawson (Ill.), a prominent Negro leader; Jackson, who said Johnson was "one of the finest and fairest Senate leaders our country has ever known"; Rep. Stewart L. Udall (Ariz.); and Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. (Va.).

Before the roll of the states could proceed for further nominations, House Majority Leader John W. McCormack (Mass.) gained recognition and moved to suspend the rules and take the nomination by a voice vote. Collins ruled that the motion was in order but that a two-thirds vote would be required. The vote was taken by voice, and the yeas appeared heavier than the nays. Collins ruled that there had been a two-thirds favorable voice vote, and declared that Johnson had been nominated by acclamation.

COMPLETE TEXT OF 1960 DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Following is the complete, full-length text of the 1960 platform adopted by the Democratic National Convention July 12.

The Rights of Man

I.

In 1796, in America's first contested national election, our Party, under the leadership of Thomas Jefferson, campaigned on the principles of "The Rights of Man."

Ever since, these four words have underscored our identity with the plain people of America and the world.

In periods of national crisis, we Democrats have returned to these words for renewed strength. We return to them today.

In 1960, "The Rights of Man" are still the issue.

It is our continuing responsibility to provide an effective instrument of political action for every American who seeks to strengthen these rights -- everywhere here in America, and everywhere in our 20th Century world.

II.

The common danger of mankind is war and the threat of war. Today, three billion human beings live in fear that some rash act or blunder may plunge us all into a nuclear holocaust which will leave only ruined cities, blasted homes, and a poisoned earth and sky.

Our objective, however, is not the right to co-exist in armed camps on the same planet with totalitarian ideologies, it is the creation of an enduring peace in which the universal values of human dignity, truth, and justice under law are finally secured for all men everywhere on earth.

If America is to work effectively for such a peace, we must first restore our national strength -- military, political, economic, and moral.

National Defense

The new Democratic administration will recast our military capacity in order to provide forces and weapons of a diversity, balance, and mobility sufficient in quantity and quality to deter both limited and general aggressions.

When the Democratic administration left office in 1953, the United States was the preeminent power in the world. Most free nations had confidence in our will and our ability to carry out our commitments to the common defense.

Even those who wished us ill respected our power and influence.

The Republican administration has lost that position of preeminence. Over the past 7½ years, our military power has steadily declined relative to that of the Russians and the Chinese and their satellites.

This is not a partisan election-year charge. It has been persistently made by high officials of the Republican administration itself. Before Congressional committees they have testified that the Communists will have a dangerous lead in intercontinental missiles through 1963 -- and that the Republican administration has no plans to catch up.

They have admitted that the Soviet Union leads in the space race -- and that they have no plans to catch up.

They have also admitted that our conventional military forces, on which we depend for defense in any non-nuclear war, have been dangerously slashed for reasons of "economy" -- and that they have no plans to reverse this trend.

As a result, our military position today is measured in terms of gaps -- missile gap, space gap, limited war gap.

To recover from the errors of the past seven years will not be easy.

This is the strength that must be erected:

1. Deterrent military power such that the Soviet and Chinese leaders will have no doubt that an attack on the United States would surely be followed by their own destruction.

2. Balanced conventional military forces which will permit a response graded to the intensity of any threats of aggressive force.

3. Continuous modernization of these forces through intensified research and development, including essential programs now slowed down, terminated, suspended, or neglected for lack of budgetary support.

A first order of business of a Democratic administration will be a complete reexamination of the organization of our armed forces.

A military organization structure, conceived before the revolution in weapons technology, cannot be suitable for the strategic deterrent, continental defense, limited war, and military alliance requirements of the 1960's.

We believe that our armed forces should be organized more nearly on the basis of function, not only to produce greater military strength, but also to eliminate duplication and save substantial sums.

We pledge our will, energies, and resources to oppose Communist aggression.

Since World War II, it has been clear that our own security must be pursued in concert with that of many other nations.

The Democratic administrations which, in World War II, led in forging a mighty and victorious alliance, after the war took the initiative in creating the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, the greatest peace-time alliance in history.

This alliance has made it possible to keep Western Europe and the Atlantic Community secure against Communist pressures.

Our present system of alliances was begun in a time of an earlier weapons technology when our ability to retaliate against Communist attack required bases all around the periphery of the Soviet Union. Today, because of our continuing weakness in mobile weapons systems and intercontinental missiles, our defenses still depend in part on bases beyond our borders for planes and shorter range missiles.

If an alliance is to be maintained in vigor, its unity must be reflected in shared purposes. Some of our allies have contributed neither devotion to the cause of freedom nor any real military strength.

The new Democratic administration will review our system of pacts and alliances. We shall continue to adhere to our treaty obligations, including the commitment of the UN charter to resist aggression. But we shall also seek to shift the emphasis of our cooperation from military aid to economic development, wherever this is possible.

Civil Defense. We commend the work of the civil defense groups throughout the nation. A strong and effective civil defense is an essential element in our nation's defense.

The new Democratic administration will undertake a full review and analysis of the programs that should be adopted if the protection possible is to be provided to the civilian population of our nation.

Arms Control

A fragile power balance sustained by mutual nuclear terror does not, however, constitute peace. We must regain the initiative on the entire international front with effective new policies, to create the conditions for peace.

There are no simple solutions to the infinitely complex challenges which face us. Mankind's eternal dream, a world of peace, can only be built slowly and patiently.

A primary task is to develop responsible proposals that will help break the deadlock on arms control.

Such proposals should include means for ending nuclear tests under workable safeguards, cutting back nuclear weapons, reducing conventional forces, preserving outer space for peaceful purposes, preventing surprise attack, and limiting the risk of accidental war.

This requires a national peace agency for disarmament planning and research to muster the scientific ingenuity, coordination, continuity, and seriousness of purpose which are now lacking in our arms control efforts.

The national peace agency would develop the technical and scientific data necessary for serious disarmament negotiations, would conduct research in cooperation with the Defense Department and Atomic Energy Commission on methods of inspection and monitoring arms control agreements, particularly agreements to control nuclear testing, and would provide continuous technical advice to our disarmament negotiators.

As with armaments, so with disarmament, the Republican administration has provided us with much talk but little constructive action. Representatives of the United States have gone to conferences without plans or preparation. The administration has played opportunistic politics, both at home andabroad.

Even during the recent important negotiations at Geneva and Paris, only a handful of people were devoting full time to work on the highly complex problem of disarmament.

More than $100 billion of the world's production now goes each year into armaments. To the extent that we can secure the adoption of effective arms control agreements, vast resources will be freed for peaceful use.

The new Democratic administration will plan for an orderly shift of our expenditures. Long-delayed reductions in excise, corporation, and individual income taxes will then be possible. We can also step up the pace in meeting our backlog of public needs and in pursuing the promise of atomic and space science in a peaceful age.

As world-wide disarmament proceeds, it will free vast resources for a new international attack on the problem of world poverty.

Instruments of Foreign Policy

American foreign policy in all its aspects must be attuned to our world of change.

We will recruit officials whose experience, humanity, and dedication fit them for the task of effectively representing America abroad.

We will provide a more sensitive and creative direction to our overseas information program. And we will overhaul our administrative machinery so that America may avoid diplomatic embarrassments and at long last speak with a single confident voice in world affairs.

The "image" of America. First, those men and women selected to represent us abroad must be chosen for their sensitive understanding of the peoples with whom they will live. We can no longer afford representatives who are ignorant of the language and culture and politics of the nation in which they represent us.

Our information programs must be more than news broadcasts and boastful recitals of our accomplishments and our material riches. We must find ways to show the people of the world that we share the same goals -- dignity, health, freedom, schools for children, a place in the sun -- and that we will work together to achieve them.

Our program of visits between Americans and people of other nations will be expanded with special emphasis upon students and younger leaders. We will encourage study of foreign languages. We favor continued support and extension of such programs as the East-West cultural center established at the University of Hawaii. We shall study a similar center for Latin America, with due consideration of the existing facilities now available in the Canal Zone.

National Policy Machinery. In the present administration, the National Security Council has been used not to focus issues for decision by the responsible leaders of government, but to paper over problems of policy with "agreed solutions" which avoid decisions.

The mishandling of the U-2 espionage flights -- the sorry spectacle of official denial, retraction, and contradiction -- and the admitted misjudging of Japanese public opinion are only two recent examples of the breakdown of the administration's machinery for assembling facts, making decisions, and coordinating action.

The Democratic Party welcomes the study now being made by the Senate Subcommittee on National Policy Machinery. The New Democratic administration will revamp and simplify this cumbersome machinery.

World Trade

World trade is more than ever essential to world peace. In the tradition of Cordell Hull, we shall expand world trade in every responsible way.

Since all Americans share the benefits of this policy, its costs should not be the burden of a few. We shall support practical measures to ease the necessary adjustments of industries and communities which may be unavoidably hurt by increases in imports.

World trade raises living standards, widens markets, reduces costs, increases profits, and builds political stability and international economic cooperation.

However, the increase in foreign imports involves costly adjustment and damage to some domestic industries and communities. The burden has been heavier recently because of the Republican failure to maintain an adequate rate of economic growth, and the refusal to use public programs to ease necessary adjustments.

The Democratic administration will help trade-affected industries by measures consistent with economic growth, orderly transition, fair competition, and the long-run economic strength of all parts of our nation.

Trade-affected industries and communities need and deserve appropriate help through trade adjustment measures such as direct loans, tax incentives, defense contracts priority, and retraining assistance.

Our government should press for reduction of foreign barriers to the sale of the products of American industry and agriculture. These are particularly severe in the case of fruit products. The present balance of payments situation provides a favorable opportunity for such action.

The new Democratic administration will seek international agreements to assure fair competition and fair labor standards to protect our own workers and to improve the lot of workers elsewhere.

Our domestic economic policies and our essential foreign policies must be harmonious.

To sell, we must buy. We therefore must resist the temptation to accept remedies that deny American producers and consumers access to world markets and destroy the prosperity of our friends in the non-Communist world.

Immigration

We shall adjust our immigration, nationality and refugee policies to eliminate discrimination and to enable members of scattered families abroad to be united with relatives already in our midst.

The national origins quota system of limiting immigration contradicts the founding principles of this nation. It is inconsistent with our belief in the rights of man. This system was instituted after World War I as a policy of deliberate discrimination by a Republican administration and Congress.

The revision of immigration and nationality laws we seek will implement our belief that enlightened immigration, naturalization and refugee policies and humane administration of them are important aspects of our foreign policy.

These laws will bring greater skills to our land, reunite families, permit the United States to meet its fair share of world programs of rescue and rehabilitation, and take advantage of immigration as an important factor in the growth of the American economy.

In this World Refugee Year it is our hope to achieve admission of our fair share of refugees. We will institute policies to alleviate suffering among the homeless wherever we are able to extend our aid.

We must remove the distinctions between native-born and naturalized citizens to ensure full protection of our laws to all. There is no place in the United States for "second-class citizenship."

The protections provided by due process, right of appeal, and statutes of limitation, can be extended to non-citizens without hampering the security of our nation.

We commend the Democratic Congress for the initial steps that have recently been taken toward liberalizing changes in immigration law. However, this should not be a piece-meal project and we are confident that a Democratic President in cooperation with Democratic Congresses will again implant a humanitarian and liberal spirit in our nation's immigration and citizenship policies.

* * * * *

To the peoples and governments beyond our shores we offer the following pledges:

The Underdeveloped World

To the non-Communist nations of Asia, Africa, and Latin America: we shall create with you working partnerships, based on mutual respect and understanding.

In the Jeffersonian tradition, we recognize and welcome the irresistible momentum of the world revolution of rising expectations for a better life. We shall identify American policy with its values and objectives.

To this end the new Democratic administration will revamp and refocus the objectives, emphasis and allocation of our foreign assistance programs.

The proper purpose of these programs is not to buy gratitude or to recruit mercenaries, but to enable the peoples of these awakening, developing nations to make their own free choices.

As they achieve a sense of belonging, of dignity, and of justice, freedom will become meaningful for them, and therefore worth defending.

Where military assistance remains essential for the common defense, we shall see that the requirements are fully met. But as rapidly as security considerations permit, we will replace tanks with tractors, bombers with bulldozers, and tacticians with technicians.

We shall place our programs of international cooperation on a long-term basis to permit more effective planning. We shall seek to associate other capital exporting countries with us in promoting the orderly economic growth of the underdeveloped world.

We recognize India and Pakistan as major tests of the capacity of free men in a difficult environment to master the age-old problems of illiteracy, poverty, and disease. We will support their efforts in every practical way.

We welcome the emerging new nations of Africa to the world community. Here again we shall strive to write a new chapter of fruitful cooperation.

In Latin America we shall restore the Good Neighbor policy based on far closer economic cooperation and increased respect and understanding.

In the Middle East we will work for guarantees to insure independence for all states. We will encourage direct Arab-Israel peace negotiations, the resettlement of Arab refugees in lands, where there is room and opportunity for them, an end to boycotts and blockades, and unrestricted use of the Suez Canal by all nations.

A billion and a half people in Asia, Africa and Latin America are engaged in an unprecedented attempt to propel themselves into the twentieth century. They are striving to create or reaffirm their national identity.

But they want much more than independence. They want an end to grinding poverty. They want more food, health for themselves and their children and other benefits that a modern industrial civilization can provide.

Communist strategy has sought to divert these aspirations into narrowly nationalistic channels, or external trouble-making or authoritarianism. The Republican administration has played into the hands of this strategy by concerning itself almost exclusively with the military problem of Communist invasion.

The Democratic programs of economic cooperation will be aimed at making it as easy as possible for the political leadership in these countries to turn the energy, talent and resources of their peoples to orderly economic growth.

History and current experience show that an annual per capita growth rate of at least 2 percent is feasible in these countries. The Democratic administration's assistance program, in concert with the aid forthcoming from our partners in Western Europe, Japan, and the British Commonwealth, will be geared to facilitating this objective.

The Democratic administration will recognize that assistance to these countries is not an emergency or short-term matter. Through the Development Loan Fund and otherwise, we shall seek to assure continuity in our aid programs for periods of at least five years, to permit more effective allocation on our part and better planning by the governments of the countries receiving aid.

More effective use of aid and a greater confidence in us and our motives will be the result.

We will establish priorities for foreign aid which will channel it to those countries abroad which, by their own willingness to help themselves, show themselves most capable of using it effectively.

We will use our own agricultural productivity as an effective tool of foreign aid, and also as a vital form of working capital for economic development. We shall seek new approaches which will provide assistance without disrupting normal world markets for food and fiber.

We shall give attention to the problem of stabilizing world prices of agricultural commodities and basic raw materials on which many underdeveloped countries depend for needed foreign exchange.

We shall explore the feasibility of shipping and storing a substantial part of our food abundance in a system of "food banks" located in distribution centers in the underdeveloped world.

Such a system would be an effective means of alleviating famine and suffering in times of natural disaster, and of cushioning the effect of bad harvests. It would also have a helpful, anti-inflationary influence as economic development gets underway.

Although basic development requirements like transport, housing, schools, and river development, may be financed by government, these projects are usually built and sometimes managed by private enterprise. Moreover, outside this public sector a large increasing role remains for private investment.

The Republican administration has done little to summon American business to play its part in this, one of the most creative tasks of our generation. The Democratic administration will take steps to recruit and organize effectively the best business talent in America for foreign economic development.

We urge continued economic assistance to Israel and the Arab peoples to help them raise their living standards. We pledge our best efforts for peace in the Middle East by seeking to prevent an arms race while guarding against the dangers of a military imbalance resulting from Soviet arms shipments.

The Atlantic Community

To our friends and associates in the Atlantic Community: we propose a broader partnership that goes beyond our common fears, to recognize the depth and sweep of our common political, economic, and cultural interests.

We welcome the recent heartening advances toward European unity. In every appropriate way, we shall encourage their further growth within the broader framework of the Atlantic Community.

After World War II, the vision of Democratic statesmen saw that an orderly, peaceful world was impossible with Europe shattered and exhausted.

They fashioned the great programs which bear their names -- the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan -- by which the economies of Europe were revived. Then in NATO they renewed for the common defense the ties of alliance forged in war.

In these endeavors, the Democratic administrations invited leading Republicans to full participation as equal partners. But the Republican administration has rejected this principle of bi-partisanship.

We have already seen how the mutual trust and confidence created abroad under Democratic leadership has been eroded by arrogance, clumsiness, and lack of understanding in the Republican administration.

The new Democratic administration will restore the former high levels of cooperation within the Atlantic community envisaged from the beginning by the NATO treaty in political and economic spheres as well as military affairs.

We welcome the progress towards European unity expressed in the Coal and Steel Community, Euratom, the European Economic Community, The European Free Trade Association, and the European Assembly.

We shall conduct our relations with the nations of the Common Market so as to encourage the opportunities for freer and more expanded trade, and to avert the possibilities of discrimination, inherent in it.

We shall encourage adjustment with the so-called "outer seven" nations so as to futher enlarge the area of freer trade.

The Communist World

To the rulers of the Communist World: We confidently accept your challenge to competition in every field of human effort.

We recognize this contest as one between two radically different approaches to the meaning of life -- our open society which places its highest value upon individual dignity, and your closed society in which the rights of men are sacrificed to the state.

We believe your Communist ideology to be sterile, unsound, and doomed to failure. We believe that your children will reject the intellectual prison in which you seek to confine them and that ultimately they will choose the eternal principles of freedom.

In the meantime, we are prepared to negotiate with you whenever and wherever there is a realistic possibility of progress without sacrifice of principle.

If negotiations through diplomatic channels provide opportunities, we will negotiate.

If debate before the United Nations holds promise, we will debate.

If meetings at high level offer prospects of success, we will be there.

But we will use all the will, power, resources, and energy at our command to resist the further encroachment of Communism on freedom -- whether at Berlin, Formosa or new points of pressure as yet undisclosed.

We shall keep open the lines of communication with our opponents. Despite difficulties in the way of peaceful agreement, every useful avenue will be energetically explored and pursued.

However, we will never surrender positions which are essential to the defense of freedom, nor will we abandon peoples who are now behind the Iron Curtain through any formal approval of the status quo.

Everyone proclaims "firmness" in support of Berlin. The issue is not the desire to be firm, but the capability to be firm. This, the Democratic Party will provide as we have done before.

The ultimate solution of the situation in Berlin must be approached in the broader context of settlement of the tensions and divisions of Europe.

The good faith of the United States is pledged likewise to defending Formosa. We will carry out that pledge.

The new Democratic administration will also reaffirm our historic policy of opposition to the establishment anywhere in the Americas of governments dominated by foreign powers, a policy now being undermined by Soviet threats to the freedom and independence of Cuba. The government of the United States under a Democratic administration will not be deterred from fulfilling its obligations and solemn responsibilities under its treaties and agreements with the nations of the Western hemisphere. Nor will the United States, in conformity with its treaty obligations, permit the establishment of a regime dominated by international, atheistic communism in the Western hmisphere.

To the people who live in the Communist world and its captive nations: we proclaim an enduring friendship which goes beyond governments and ideologies to our common human interest in a better world.

Through exchanges of persons, cultural contacts, trade in non-strategic areas, and other non-governmental activities, we will endeavor to preserve and improve opportunities for human relationships which no Iron Curtain can permanently sever.

No political platform promise in history was more cruelly cynical than the Republican effort to buy votes in 1952 with false promises of painless liberation for the captive nations.

The blood of heroic freedom fighters in Hungary tragically proved this promise a fraud. We Democrats will never be party to such cruel cultivation of false hopes.

We look forward to the day when the men and women of Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, and the other captive nations will stand again in freedom and justice. We will hasten, by every honorable and responsible means, the arrival of the day.

We shall never accept any deal or arrangement which acquiesces in the present subjugation of these peoples.

We deeply regret that the policies and actions of the government of Communist China have interrupted the generations of friendship between the Chinese and American peoples.

We reaffirm our pledge of determined opposition to the present admission of Communist China to the United Nations.

Although normal diplomatic relations between our governments are impossible under present conditions, we shall welcome any evidence that the Chinese Communist government is genuinely prepared to create a new relationship based on respect for international obligations, including the release of American prisoners. We will continue to make every effort to effect the release of American civilians and servicemen now unjustly imprisoned in Red China and elsewhere in the Communist empire.

The United Nations

To all our fellow members of the United Nations: we shall strengthen our commitments in this, our great continuing institution for conciliation and the growth of a world community.

Through the machinery of the United Nations, we will work for disarmament, the establishment of an international police force, the strengthening of the world court, and the establishment of world law.

We shall propose the bolder and more effective use of the specialized agencies to promote the world's economic and social development.

Great Democratic presidents have taken the lead in the effort to unite the nations of the world in an international organization to assure world peace with justice under law.

The League of Nations, conceived by Woodrow Wilson, was doomed by Republican defeat of United States participation.

The United Nations, sponsored by Franklin Roosevelt, has become the one place where representatives of the rival systems and interests which divide the world can and do maintain continuous contact.

The United States adherence to the World Court contains a so-called "self-judging reservation" which, in effect, permits us to prevent a Court decision, in any particular case in which we are involved. The Democratic Party proposes its repeal.

To all these endeavors so essential to world peace, we, the members of the Democratic Party, will bring a new urgency, persistence, and determination, born of the conviction that in our thermonuclear century, all of the other Rights of Man hinge on our ability to assure man's right to peace.

III.

The pursuit of peace, our contribution to the stability of the new nations of the world, our hopes for progress and well-being at home, all these depend in large measure on our ability to release the full potential of our American economy for employment, production, and growth.

Our generation of Americans has achieved an historic technological breakthrough. Today we are capable of creating an abundance in goods and services beyond the dreams of our parents. Yet on the threshold of plenty, the Republican administration hesitates, confused and afraid.

As a result, massive human needs now exist side by side with idle workers, idle capital, and idle machines.

The Republican failure in the economic field has been virtually complete.

Their years of power have consisted of two recessions, in 1953-54 and 1957-60, separated by the most severe peacetime inflation in history.

They have shown themselves incapable of checking inflation. In their efforts to do so, they have brought on recessions that have thrown millions of Americans out of work. Yet even in these slumps, the cost of living has continued to climb, and it is now at an all-time high.

They have slowed down the rate of growth of the economy to about one-third the rate of the Soviet Union.

Over the past 7½-year period, the Republicans have failed to balance the budget or reduce the national debt. Responsible fiscal policy requires surpluses in good times to more than offset the deficits which may occur in recessions, in order to reduce the national debt over the long run. The Republican administration has produced the deficits -- in fact, the greatest deficit in any peacetime year in history, in 1958-59 -- but not the surpluses. Consequently, their seven years have produced a total deficit of $19 billion.

While reducing outlays for essential public services which directly benefit our people, they have raised the annual interest charge on the national debt to a level $3 billion higher than when they took office. In the eight fiscal years of the Republican administration, these useless higher interest payments will have cost the taxpayers $9 billion.

They have mismanaged the public debt not only by increasing interest rates, but also by failing to lengthen the average maturity of government obligations when they had a clear opportunity to do so.

Economic Growth

The new Democratic administration will confidently proceed to unshackle American enterprise and to free American labor, industrial leadership, and capital, to create an abundance that will outstrip any other system.

Free competitive enterprise is the most creative and productive form of economic order that the world has seen. The recent slow pace of American growth is due not to the failure of our free economy but to the failure of our national leadership.

We Democrats believe that our economy can and must grow at an average rate of 5 percent annually, almost twice as fast as our average annual rate since 1953. We pledge ourselves to policies that will achieve this goal without inflation.

Economic growth is the means whereby we improve the American standard of living and produce added tax resources for national security and essential public services.

Our economy must grow more swiftly in order to absorb two groups of workers: the much larger number of young people who will be reaching working age in the 1960's, and the workers displaced by the rapid pace of technological advances and automation. Republican policies which have stifled growth could only mean increasingly severe unemployment, particularly of youth and older workers.

An End to Tight Money

As the first step in speeding economic growth, a Democratic President will put an end to the present high interest, tight money policy.

This policy has failed in its stated purpose -- to keep prices down. It has given us two recessions within five years, bankrupted many of our farmers, produced a record number of business failures, and added billions of dollars in unnecessary higher interest charges to government budgets and the cost of living.

A new Democratic administration will reject this philosophy of economic slowdown. We are committed to maximum employment, at decent wages and with fair profits, in a far more productive, expanding economy.

The Republican high interest policy has extracted a costly toll from every American who has financed a home, an automobile, a refrigerator, or a television set.

It has foisted added burdens on taxpayers of state and local governments which must borrow for schools and other public services.

It has added to the cost of many goods and services, and hence has been itself a factor in inflation.

It has created windfalls for many financial institutions.

The $9 billion of added interest charges on the national debt would have been even higher but for the prudent insistence of the Democratic Congress on maintaining the ceiling on interest rates for long-term government bonds.

Control of Inflation

The American consumer has a right to fair prices. We are determined to secure that right.

Inflation has its roots in a variety of causes; its cure lies in a variety of remedies. Among those remedies are monetary and credit policies properly applied, budget surpluses in times of full employment, and action to restrain "administered price" increases in industries where economic power rests in the hands of a few.

A fair share of the gains from increasing productivity in many industries should be passed on to the consumer through price reductions.

The agenda which a new Democratic administration will face next January is crowded with urgent needs on which action has been delayed, deferred, or denied by the present administration.

A new Democratic administration will undertake to meet those needs.

It will reaffirm the Economic Bill of Rights which Franklin Roosevelt wrote into our national conscience sixteen years ago. It will reaffirm these rights for all Americans of whatever race, place of residence, or station in life.

> 1. "The right to a useful and remunerative job in the industries or shops or farms or mines of the nation."

Full Employment

The Democratic Party reaffirms its support of full employment as a paramount objective of national policy.

For nearly 30 months the rate of unemployment has been between 5 and 7.5% of the labor force. A pool of 3 to 4 million citizens, able and willing to work but unable to find jobs, has been written off by the Republican administration as a "normal" readjustment of the economic system.

The policies of a Democratic administration to restore economic growth will reduce current unemployment to a minimum.

Thereafter, if recessionary trends appear, we will act promptly with counter-measures, such as public works or temporary tax cuts. We will not stand idly by and permit recessions to run their course as the Republican administration has done.

Aid to Depressed Areas

The right to a job requires action to create new industry in America's depressed areas of chronic unemployment.

General economic measures will not alone solve the problems of localities which suffer some special disadvantage. To bring prosperity to these depressed areas and to enable them to make their full contribution to the national welfare, specially directed action is needed.

Areas of heavy and persistent unemployment result from depletion of natural resources, technological change, shifting defense requirements, or trade imbalances which have caused the decline of major industries. Whole communities, urban and rural, have been left stranded in distress and despair, through no fault of their own.

These communities have undertaken valiant efforts of self-help. But mutual aid, as well as self-help, is part of the American tradition. Stricken communities deserve the help of the whole nation.

The Democratic Congress twice passed bills to provde this help. The Republican President twice vetoed them.

These bills proposed low-interest loans to private enterprise to create new industry and new jobs in depressed communities, assistance to the communities to provide public facilities necessary to encourage the new industry, and retraining of workers for the new jobs.

The Democratic Congress will again pass, and the Democratic President will sign, such a bill.

Discrimination in Employment

The right to a job requires action to break down artificial and arbitrary barriers to employment based on age, race, sex, religion, or national origin.

Unemployment strikes hardest at workers over 40, minority groups, young people, and women. We will not achieve full employment until prejudice against these workers is wiped out.

Collective Bargaining

The right to a job requires the restoration of full support for a collective bargaining and the repeal of the anti-labor excesses which have been written into our labor laws.

Under Democratic leadership a sound national policy was developed, expressed particularly by the Wagner National Labor Relations Act, which guaranteed the rights of workers to organize and to bargain collectively. But the Republican administration has replaced this sound policy with a national anti-labor policy.

The Republican Taft-Hartley Act seriously weakened unions in their efforts to bring economic justice to the millions of American workers who remain unorganized.

By administrative action, anti-labor personnel appointed by the Republicans to the National Labor Relations Board have made the Taft-Hartley Act even more restrictive in its application than in its language.

Thus the traditional goal of the Democratic Party -- to give all workers the right to organize and bargain collectively -- has still not been achieved.

We pledge the enactment of an affirmative labor policy which will encourage free collective bargaining through the growth and development of free and responsible unions.

Millions of workers just now seeking to organize are blocked by federally authorized "right-to-work" laws, unreasonable limitations on the right to picket, and other hampering legislative and administrative provisions.

Again, in the new Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, the Republican administration perverted the constructive effort of the Democratic Congress to deal with improper activities of a few in labor and management by turning that Act into a means of restricting the legitimate rights of the vast majority of working men and women in honest labor unions. This law likewise strikes hardest at the weak or poorly organized, and it fails to deal with equal vigor with abuses of management as well as those of labor.

We will repeal the authorization for "right-to-work" laws, limitations on the right to strike, to picket peacefully and to tell the public the facts of a labor dispute, and other anti-labor features of the Taft-Hartley Act and the 1959 Act. This unequivocal pledge for the repeal of the anti-labor and restrictive provisions of those laws will encourage collective bargaining and strengthen and support the free and honest labor movement.

The Railroad Retirement Act and the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act are in need of improvement. We strongly oppose Republican attempts to weaken the Railway Labor Act.

We shall strengthen and modernize the Walsh-Healey and Davis-Bacon Acts, which protect the wage standards of workers employed by government contractors.

Basic to the achievement of stable labor-management relations is leadership from the White House. The Republican administration has failed to provide such leadership.

They failed to foresee the deterioration of labor-management relations in the steel industry last year. When it became obvious that a national emergency was developing, they failed to forestall it. When it came, their only solution was government-by-injunction.

A Democratic President, through his leadership and concern, will produce a better climate for continuing constructive relationships between labor and management. He will have periodic White House conferences between labor and management to consider their mutual problems before they reach the critical stage.

A Democratic President will use the vast fact-finding facilities that are available to inform himself, and the public, in exercising his leadership in labor disputes for the benefit of the nation as a whole.

If he needs more such facilities, or authority, we will provide them.

We further pledge that in the administration of all labor legislation we will restore the level of integrity, competence and sympathetic understanding required to carry out the intent of such legislation.

Planning for Automation

The right to a job requires planning for automation, so that men and women will be trained and available to meet shifting employment needs.

We will conduct a continuing analysis of the nation's manpower resources and of measures which may be required to assure their fullest development and use.

We will provide the government leadership necessary to insure that the blessings of automation do not become burdens of widespread unemployment. For the young and the technologically displaced workers, we will provide the opportunity for training and retraining that equips them for jobs to be filled.

Minimum Wages

> 2. "The right to earn enouh to provide adequate food and clothing and recreation."

At the bottom of the income scale are some eight million families whose earnings are too low to provide even basic necessities of food, shelter and clothing.

We pledge to raise the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour and to extend coverage to several million workers not now protected.

We pledge further improvements in the wage, hour and coverage standards of the Fair Labor Standards Act so as to extend its benefits to all workers employed in industries engaged in or affecting interstate commerce and to raise its standards to keep up with our general economic progress and needs.

We shall seek to bring the 2 million men, women and children who work for wages on the farms of the United States under the protection of existing labor and social legislation; and to assure migrant labor, perhaps the most underprivileged of all, of a comprehensive program to bring them not only decent wages but also an adequate standard of health, housing, Social Security protection, education and welfare services.

Agriculture

> 3. "The right of every farmer to raise and sell his products at a return which will give him and his family a decent living."

We shall take positive action to raise farm income to full parity levels and to preserve family farming as a way of life.

We shall put behind us once and for all the timidity with which our government has viewed our abundance of food and fiber.

We will set new high levels of food consumption both at home and abroad.

As long as many Americans and hundreds of millions of people in other countries remain underfed, we shall regard these agricultural riches, and the family farmers who produce them, not as a liability but as a national asset.

Using our Abundance. The Democratic administration will inaugurate a national food and fiber policy for expanded use of our agricultural abundance. We will no longer view food stockpiles with alarm but will use them as powerful instruments for peace and plenty.

We will increase consumption at home. A vigorous expanding economy will enable many American families to eat more and better food.

We will use the food stamp programs authorized to feed needy children, aged and unemployed. We will expand and improve the school lunch and milk programs.

We will establish and maintain a food reserve for national defense purposes near important population centers to preserve lives in event of national disaster, operated so as not to depress farm prices. We will expand research into new industrial uses of agricultural products. We will increase consumption abroad. The Democratic Party believes our nation's capacity to produce food and fiber is one of the great weapons for waging war against hunger and want throughout the world. With wise management of our food abundance we will expand trade between nations, support economic and human development programs and combat famine.

Unimaginative, outmoded Republican policies which fail to use these productive capacities of our farms have been immensely costly to our nation. They can and will be changed.

Achieving Income Parity. While farmers have raised their productive efficiency to record levels, Republican farm policies forced their income to drop by 30 percent over the past eight years.

Tens of thousands of farm families have been bankrupted and forced off the land. And this despite the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture has spent more on farm programs than all previous Secretaries in history combined.

Farmers acting individually or in small groups are helpless to protect their incomes from sharp declines. Their only recourse is to produce more, throwing production still further out of balance with demand and driving prices down further.

This disastrous downward cycle can be stopped only by effective farm programs sympathetically administered with the assistance of democratically elected farmer committees.

The Democratic administration will work to bring about full parity income for farmers in all segments of agriculture by helping them to balance farm production with the expanding needs of the nation and the world.

Measures to this end include production and marketing quotas measured in terms of barrels, bushels, and bales, loans on basic commodities at not less than 90% of parity, production payments, commodity purchases, and marketing orders and agreements.

We repudiate the Republican administration of the Soil Bank Program which has emphasized the retirement of whole farm units and pledge an orderly land retirement and conservation program.

We are convinced that a successful combination of these approaches will cost considerably less than present Republican programs which have failed.

We will encourage agricultural cooperatives by expanding and liberalizing existing credit facilities and developing new facilities if necessary to assist them in extending their marketing and purchasing activities, and we will protect cooperatives from punitive taxation.

The Democratic administration will improve the marketing practices of the family-type dairy farm to reduce risk of loss.

To protect farmers' incomes in times of natural disaster, the Federal Crop Insurance Program, created and developed experimentally under Democratic administrations, should be invigorated and expanded nationwide.

Improving Working and Living on Farms. Farm families have been among those victimized most severely by Republican tight money policies.

Young people have been barred from entering agriculture. Giant corporations and other non-farmers, with readier access to credit and through vertical integration methods, have supplanted hundreds of farm families and caused the bankruptcy of many others.

The Democratic Party is committed by tradition and conviction to preservation of family agriculture.

To this end, we will expand and liberalize farm credit facilities, especially to meet the needs of family-farm agriculture and to assist beginning farmers.

Many families in America's rural counties are still living in poverty because of inadequate resources and opportunity. This blight and personal desperation should have received national priority attention long ago.

The new Democratic administration will begin at once to eradicate long-neglected rural blight. We will help people help themselves with extended and supervised credit for farm improvement, local industrial development, improved vocational training and other assistance to those wishing to change to non-farm employment, and the fullest development of commercial recreational possibilities. This is one of the major objectives of the area redevelopment program, twice vetoed by the Republican President.

The rural electric cooperatives celebrate this year the twenty-fifth anniversary of the creation of the Rural Electrification Administration under President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The Democratic Congress has successfully fought the efforts of the Republican administration to cut off REA loans and force its high interest rate policies on this great rural enterprise.

We will maintain interest rates for REA co-ops and public power districts at the levels provided in present law.

We deplore administration failure to provide the dynamic leadership necessary to encourage loans to rural users for generation of power where necessary.

We promise the co-ops active support in meeting the ever-growing demand for electric power and telephone service to be filled on a complete area-coverage basis, without requiring benefits for special interest power groups.

In every way we will seek to help the men, women, and children whose livelihood comes from the soil to achieve better housing, education, health, and decent earnings and working conditions.

All these goals demand the leadership of a Secretary of Agriculture who is not only conversant with the technological and economic aspects of farm problems, but who is sympathetic with the objectives of effective farm legislation not only for farmers but for the best interest of the nation as a whole.

Small Business

4. "The right of every businessman, large and small, to trade in an atmosphere of freedom from unfair competition and domination by monopolies at home and abroad."

The new Democratic administration will act to make our free economy really free -- free from the oppression of monopolistic power -- free from the suffocating impact of high interest rates. We will help create an economy in which small businesses can take root, grow and flourish.

We Democrats pledge:

1. Action to aid small business to obtain credit and equity capital at reasonable rates. Small business which must borrow to stay alive has been a particular victim of the high interest policies of the Republican administration.

The loan program of the Small Business Administration should be accelerated, and the independence of that agency preserved. The Small Business Investment Act of 1958 must be administered with a greater sense of its importance and possibilities.

2. Protection of the public against the growth of monopoly.

The last eight years of Republican government has been the greatest period of merger and amalgamation in industry and banking in American history. Democratic Congresses have enacted numerous important measures to strengthen our anti-trust laws. Since 1950 the four Democratic Congresses have enacted laws like the Celler-Kefauver Anti-merger Act, and to improve the laws against price discriminations and tie-in sales.

When the Republicans were in control of the 80th and of the 83rd Congresses they failed to enact a single measure to strengthen or improve the anti-trust laws.

The Democratic Party opposes this trend to monopoly.

We pledge vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws.

We favor requiring corporations to file advance notice of mergers with the antitrust enforcement agencies.

We favor permitting all firms to have access at reasonable rates to patented inventions resulting from government financed research and development contracts.

We favor strengthening the Robinson-Patman Act to protect small business against price discrimination.

We favor authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to obtain temporary injunctions during the pendency of administrative proceedings.

3. A more equitable share of government contracts to small and independent business.

We will move from almost complete reliance on negotiation in the award of government contracts toward open, competitive bidding.

Housing

5. "The right of every family to a decent home."

Today our rate of home building is less than ten years ago. A healthy expanding economy will enable us to build two million homes a year, in wholesome neighborhoods, for people of all incomes.

At this rate, within a single decade we can clear away our slums and assure every American family a decent place to live.

Republican policies have led to a decline of the home building industry and the production of fewer homes. Republican high interest policies have forced the cost of decent housing beyond the range of many families. Republican indifference has perpetuated slums.

We record the unpleasant fact that in 1960 at least 40 million Americans live in substandard housing.

One million new families are formed each year and need housing, and 300,000 existing homes need to be replaced. At present, construction does not even meet these requirements, much less permit reduction of the backlog of slum units.

We support a housing construction goal of more than 2,000,000 homes a year. Most of the increased construction will be priced to meet the housing needs of middle and low income families who now live in substandard housing and are priced out of the market for decent homes.

Our housing programs will provide for rental as well as sales housing. They will permit expanded cooperative housing programs and sharply stepped-up rehabilitation of existing homes.

To make possible the building of 2,000,000 homes a year in wholesome neighborhoods, the home building industry should be aided by special mortgage assistance, with low interest rates, long-term mortgage periods and reduced down payments. Where necessary, direct government loans should be provided.

Even with this new and flexible approach, there will still be need for a substantial low-rent public housing program authorizing as many units as local communities require and are prepared to build.

Health

6. "The right to adequate medical care and the opportunity to achieve and enjoy good health."

Illness is expensive. Many Americans have neither incomes nor insurance protection to enable them to pay for modern health care. The problem is particularly acute with our older citizens, among whom serious illness strikes most often.

We shall provide medical care benefits for the aged as part of the time-tested social security insurance system. We reject any proposal which would require such citizens to submit to the indignity of a means test -- a "pauper's oath."

For young and old alike, we need more medical schools, more hospitals, more research laboratories to speed the final conquest of major killers.

Medical Care for Older Persons. Sixty million Americans -- more than a third of our people -- have no insurance protection against the high cost of illness. For the rest, private health insurance pays, on the average, only about one-third of the cost of medical care.

The problem is particularly acute among the 16 million Americans over 65 years old, disabled workers, widows and orphans.

Most of these have low incomes and the elderly among them suffer two to three times as much illness as the rest of the population.

The Republican administration refused to acknowledge any national responsibility for health care for elder citizens until forced to do so by an increasingly outraged demand. Then, their belated proposal was a cynical sham built around a degrading test based on means or income -- a "pauper's oath."

The most practicable way to provide health protection for older people is to use the contributory machinery of the Social Security System for insurance covering hospital bills and other high cost medical services. For those relatively few of our older people who have never been eligible for social security coverage, we shall provide corresponding benefits by appropriations from the general revenue.

Research. We will step up medical research on the major killers and crippling diseases -- cancer, heart disease, arthritis, mental illness. Expenditures for these purposes should be limited only by the availability of personnel and promising lines of research. Today such illness costs us $35 billion annually, much of which could be avoided. Federal appropriations for medical research are barely 1% of this amount.

Heart disease and cancer together account for two out of every three deaths in this country. The Democratic President will summon to a White House conference the nation's most distinguished scientists in these fields to map a coordinated long-run program for the prevention and control of these diseases.

We will also support a cooperative program with other nations on international health research.

Hospitals. We will expand and improve the Hill-Burton hospital construction program.

Health Manpower. To ease the growing shortage of doctors and other medical personnel we propose federal aid for constructing, expanding and modernizing schools of medicine, dentistry, nursing and public health.

We are deeply concerned that the high cost of medical education is putting this profession beyond the means of most American families. We will provide scholarships and other assistance to break through the financial barriers to medical education.

Mental Health. Mental patients fill more than half the hospital beds in the country today. We will provide greatly increased federal support for psychiatric research and training and community mental health programs to help bring back thousands of our hospitalized mentally ill to full and useful lives in the community.

* * * * *

7. "The right to adequate protection from the economic fears of old age, sickness, accidents, and unemployment."

A Program for the Aging

The Democratic administration will end the neglect of our older citizens. They deserve lives of usefulness, dignity, independence, and participation. We shall assure them not only health care but employment for those who want work, decent housing, and recreation.

Already 16 million Americans -- about one in ten -- are over 65, with the prospect of 26 million by 1980.

Health. As stated, we will provide an effective system for paid-up medical insurance upon retirement, financed during working years through the social security mechanism and available to all retired persons without a means test. This is first priority.

Income. Half of the people over 65 have incomes inadequate for basic nutrition, decent housing, minimum recreation and medical care. Older people who do not want to retire need employment opportunity and those of retirement age who no longer wish to or cannot work need better retirement benefits.

We pledge a campaign to eliminate discrimination in employment due to age. As a first step we will prohibit such discrimination by government contractors and subcontractors.

We will amend the Social Security Act to increase the retirement benefit for each additional year of work after 65, thus encouraging workers to continue on the job full time.

To encourage part-time work by others, we favor raising the $1200 a year ceiling on what a worker may earn while still drawing social security benefits.

Retirement benefits must be increased generally, and minimum benefits raised from $33 to $50 a month.

Housing. We shall provide decent and suitable housing which older persons can afford. Specifically we shall move ahead with the program of direct government loans for housing for older people initiated in the Housing Act of 1959, which the Republican administration has sought to kill.

Special Services. We shall take Federal action in support of state efforts to bring standards of care in nursing homes and other institutions for the aged up to desirable minimums.

We shall support demonstration and training programs to translate proven research into action in such fields as health, nutritional guidance, home care, counseling, recreational activity.

Taken together, these measures will affirm a new charter of rights for the older citizens among us -- the right to a life of usefulness, health, dignity, independence and participation.

Welfare

Disability Insurance. We shall permit workers who are totally and permanently disabled to retire at any age, removing the arbitrary requirement that the worker be 50 years of age.

We shall also amend the law so that after six months of total disability, a worker will be eligible for disability benefits, with restorative services to enable the worker to return to work.

Physically Handicapped. We pledge continued support of legislation for the rehabilitation of physically handicapped persons and improvement of employment opportunities for them.

Public Assistance. Persons in need who are inadequately protected by social insurance are cared for by the states and local communities under public assistance programs.

The Federal Government, which now shares the cost of aid to some of these, should share in all, and benefits should be made available without regard to residence.

Unemployment Benefits. We will establish uniform minimum standards throughout the nation for coverage, duration, and amount of unemployment insurance benefits.

Equality for Women. We support legislation which will guarantee to women equality of rights under the law, including equal pay for equal work.

Child Welfare. The Child Welfare Program and other services already established under the Social Security Act should be expanded. Federal leadership is required in the nationwide campaign to prevent and control juvenile delinquency.

Intergroup Relations. We propose a federal bureau of intergroup relations to help solve problems of discrimination in housing, education, employment and community opportunities in general. The bureau would assist in the solution of problems arising from the resettlement of immigrants and migrants within our own country, and in resolving religious, social and other tensions where they arise.

Education

8. "The right to a good education."

America's young people are our greatest resources for the future. Each of them deserves the education which will best develop his potentialities.

We shall act at once to help in building the classrooms and employing the teachers that are essential if the right to a good education is to have genuine meaning for all the youth of America in the decade ahead.

As a national investment in our future we propose a program of loans and scholarship grants to assure that qualified young Americans will have full opportunity for higher education, at the institutions of their choice, regardless of the income of their parents.

The new Democratic administration will end eight years of official neglect of our educational system.

America's education faces a financial crisis. The tremendous increase in the number of children of school and college age has far outrun the available supply of educational facilities and qualified teachers. The classroom shortage alone is interfering with the education of 10 million students.

America's teachers, parents and school administrators have striven courageously to keep up with the increased challenge of education.

So have states and local communities. Education absorbs two-fifths of all their revenue. With limited resources, private educational institutions have shouldered their share of the burden.

Only the Federal Government is not doing its part. For eight years, measures for the relief of the educational crisis have been help up by the cynical maneuvers of the Republican Party in Congress and the White House.

We believe that America can meet its educational obligations only with generous federal financial support, within the traditional framework of local control. The assistance will take the form of federal grants to states for educational purposes they deem most pressing, including classroom construction and teachers' salaries. It will include aid for the construction of academic facilities as well as dormitories at colleges and universities.

We pledge further federal support for all phases of vocational education for youth and adults; for libraries and adult education; for realizing the potential of educational television; and for exchange of students and teachers with other nations.

As part of a broader concern for young people we recommend establishment of a Youth Conservation Corps, to give underprivileged young people a rewarding experience in a healthful environment.

* * * * *

The pledges contained in this Economic Bill of Rights point the way to a better life for every family in America.

They are the means to a goal that is now within our reach -- the final eradication in America of the age-old evil of poverty.

Yet there are other pressing needs on our national agenda.

Natural Resources

A thin layer of earth, a few inches of rain, and a blanket of air makes human life possible on our planet.

Sound public policy must assure that these essential resources will be available to provide the good life for our children and future generations.

Water, timber and grazing lands, recreational areas in our parks, shores, forests and wildernesses, energy, minerals, even pure air -- all are feeling the press of enormously increased demands of a rapidly growing population.

Natural resources are the birthright of all the people.

The new Democratic administration, with the vision that built a TVA and a Grand Coulee, will develop and conserve that heritage for the use of this and future generations. We will reverse Republican policies under which America's resources have been wasted, depleted, underdeveloped, and recklessly given away.

We favor the best use of our natural resources, which generally means adoption of the multiple-purpose principle to achieve full development for all the many functions they can serve.

Water and Soil. An abundant supply of pure water is essential to our economy. This is a national problem.

Water must serve domestic, industrial and irrigation needs and inland navigation. It must provide habitat for fish and wildlife, supply the base for much outdoor recreation, and generate electricity. Water must also be controlled to prevent floods, pollution, salinity and silt.

The new Democratic administration will develop a comprehensive national water resource policy. In cooperation with state and local governments, and interested private groups, a Democratic administration will develop a balanced, multiple-purpose plan for each major river basin to be revised periodically to meet changing needs. We will erase the Republican slogan of "no new starts" and will begin again to build multiple-purpose dams, hydroelectric facilities, flood control works, navigation facilities, and reclamation projects to meet mounting and urgent needs.

We will renew the drive to protect every acre of farm land under a soil and water conservation plan and speed up the small watershed program.

We will support and intensify the research effort to find an economical way to convert salt and brackish water. The Republicans discouraged this research, which holds untold possibilities for the whole world.

Water and Air Pollution. America can no longer take pure water and air for granted. Polluted rivers carry their dangers to everyone living along their courses; impure air does not respect boundaries.

Federal action is needed in planning, coordinating and helping to finance pollution control. The states and local communities cannot go it alone. Yet President Eisenhower vetoed a Democratic bill to give them more financial help in building sewage treatment plants.

A Democratic President will sign such a bill.

Democrats will step up research on pollution control, giving special attention to:

(1) the rapidly growing problem of air pollution from industrial plants, automobile exhausts, and other sources, and

(2) disposal of chemical and radioactive wastes, some of which are now being dumped off our coasts without adequate knowledge of the potential consequences.

Outdoor Recreation. As population grows and the work week shortens and transportation becomes easier and speedier, the need for outdoor recreation facilities mounts.

We must act quickly to retain public access to the oceans, gulfs, rivers, streams, lakes, and reservoirs, and their shorelines, and to reserve adequate camping and recreational areas while there is yet time. Areas near major population centers are particularly needed.

The new Democratic administration will work to improve and extend recreation opportunities in national parks and monuments; forests; river development projects; and near metropolitan areas. Emphasis will be on attractive, low-cost facilities for all the people and on preventing undue commercialization.

The National Park System is still incomplete; in particular, the few remaining suitable shorelines must be included in it. A National Wilderness System should be created for areas already set aside as wildernesses. The system should be extended but only after careful consideration by the Congress of the value of areas for competing uses.

Recreational needs of the surrounding area should be given important consideration in disposing of federally owned lands.

We will protect fish and game habitats from commercial exploitation and require military installations to conform to sound conservation practices.

Energy. The Republican administration would turn the clock back to the days before the New Deal, in an effort to divert the benefits of the great natural energy resources from all the people to a favored few. It has followed for many years a "no new starts" policy.

It has stalled atomic energy development; it has sought to cripple rural electrification.

It has closed the pilot plant on getting oil from shale.

It has harassed and hampered the TVA.

We reject this philosophy and these policies. The people are entitled to use profitably what they already own.

The Democratic administration instead will foster the development of efficient regional giant power systems from all sources, including water, tidal, and nuclear, to supply low-cost electricity to all retail electric systems, public, private, and cooperative.

The Democratic administration will continue to develop "yardsticks" for measuring the rates of private utility systems. This means meeting the needs of rural electric cooperatives for low-interest loans for distribution, transmission and generation facilities; federal transmission facilities, where appropriate, to provide efficient low-cost power supply; and strict enforcement of the public-preference clause in power marketing.

The Democratic administration will support continued study and research on energy fuel resources, including new sources in wind and sun. It will push forward with the Passamaquoddy tidal power project with its great promise of cheaper power and expanded prosperity for the people of New England.

We support the establishment of a national fuels policy.

The $15 billion national investment in atomic energy should be protected as a part of the public domain.

Federal Lands and Forests. The record of the Republican administration in handling the public domain is one of complete lethargy. It has failed to secure the fullest present benefits. In some cases, it has given away priceless resources for plunder by private corporations, as in the Al Sarena mining incident and the secret leasing of game refuges to favored oil interests.

The new Democratic administration will develop balanced land and forest policies suited to the needs of a growing America.

This means intensive forest management on a multiple use and sustained yield basis, reforestation of burnt-over lands, building public access roads, range reseeding and improvement, intensive work in watershed management, concern for small business operations, and insuring free public access to public lands for recreational uses.

Minerals. America uses half the minerals produced in the entire free world. Yet our mining industry is in what may be the initial phase of a serious long-term depression. Sound policy requires that we strengthen the domestic mining industry without interfering with adequate supplies of needed materials at reasonable costs.

We pledge immediate efforts toward the establishment of a realistic long range minerals policy.

The new Democratic administration will begin intensive research on scientific prospecting for mineral deposits.

We will speed up the geologic mapping of the country, with emphasis on Alaska.

We will resume research and development work on use of low-grade mineral reserves, especially oil shale, lignites, iron ore taconite, and radioactive minerals. These efforts have been halted or cut back by the Republican administration.

The Democratic Party favors a study of the problem of non-uniform seaward boundaries of the coastal states.

Government Machinery for Managing Resources. Long-range programming of the nation's resource development is essential. We favor creation of a council of advisors on resources and conservation, which will evaluate and report annually upon our resource needs and progress.

We shall put budgeting for resources on a business-like basis, distinguishing between operating expense and capital investment, so that the country can have an accurate picture of the costs and returns. We propose the incremental method in determining the economic justification of our river basin programs. Charges for commercial use of public lands will be brought into line with benefits received.

Cities and Their Suburbs

A new Democratic administration will expand federal programs to aid urban communities to clear their slums, dispose of their sewage, educate their children, transport suburban commuters to and from their jobs, and combat juvenile delinquency.

We will give the city dweller a voice at the Cabinet table by bringing together within a single department programs concerned with urban and metropolitan problems.

The United States is now predominantly an urban nation.

The efficiency, comfort, and beauty of our cities and suburbs influence the lives of all Americans.

Local governments have found increasing difficulty in coping with such fundamental public problems as urban renewal, slum clearance, water supply, mass transportation, recreation, health, welfare, education and metropolitan planning. These problems are, in many cases, interstate and regional in scope.

Yet the Republican administration has turned its back upon urban and suburban America. The list of Republican vetoes includes housing, urban renewal and slum clearance, area redevelopment, public works, airports and stream pollution control. It has proposed severe cut-backs in aid for hospital construction, public assistance, vocational education, community facilities and sewage disposal.

The result has been to force communities to thrust an ever-greater tax load upon the already overburdened property taxpayer and to forego needed public services.

The Democratic Party believes that state and local governments are strengthened -- not weakened -- by financial assistance from the Federal Government. We will extend such aid without impairing local administration through unnecessary federal interference or red tape.

We propose a ten-year action program to restore our cities and provide for balanced suburban development, including the following:

1. The elimination of slums and blight and the restoration of cities and depressed areas within the next ten years.

2. Federal aid for metropolitan area planning and community facility programs.

3. Federal aid for comprehensive metropolitan transportation programs, including bus and rail mass transit, commuter railroads as well as highway programs and construction of civil airports.

4. Federal aid in combatting air and water pollution.

5. Expansion of park systems to meet the recreation needs of our growing population.

The Federal Government must recognize the financial burdens placed on local governments, urban and rural alike, by federal installations and land holdings.

Transportation

Over the past seven years, we have watched the steady weakening of the nation's transportation system. Railroads are in distress. Highways are congested. Airports and airways lag far behind the needs of the jet age.

To meet this challenge we will establish a national transportation policy, designed to coordinate and modernize our facilities for transportation by road, rail, water, and air.

Air. The jet age has made rapid improvement in air safety imperative. Rather than "an orderly withdrawal" from the airport grant programs as proposed by the Republican administration, we pledge to expand the program to accommodate growing air traffic.

Water. Development of our inland waterways, our harbors, and Great Lakes commerce have been held back by the Republican President.

We pledge the improvement of our rivers and harbors by new starts and adequate maintenance.

A strong and efficient American-flag Merchant Marine is essential to peace-time commerce and defense emergencies. Continued aid for ship construction and operation to offset cost differentials favoring foreign shipping is essential to these goals.

Roads. The Republican administration has slowed down, stretched out and greatly increased the costs of the Interstate Highway Program.

The Democratic Party supports the highway program embodied in the Acts of 1956 and 1958 and the principle of federal-state partnership in highway construction.

We commend the Democratic Congress for establishing a special committee which has launched an extensive investigation of this highway program. Continued scrutiny of this multi-billion dollar highway program can prevent waste, inefficiency and graft and maintain the public's confidence.

Rail. The nation's railroads are in particular need of freedom from burdensome regulation to enable them to compete effectively with other forms of transportation. We also support federal assistance in meeting certain capital needs particularly for urban mass transportation.

Science

We will recognize the special role of our Federal Government in support of basic and applied research.

Space. The Republican administration has remained incredibly blind to the prospects of space exploration. They have failed to pursue space programs with a sense of urgency anywhere near equal to their importance to the future of the world.

It has allowed the Communists to forge ahead to hit the moon first and to launch substantially greater payloads. The Republican program is a catch-all of assorted projects with no clearly-defined, long-range plan of research.

The new Democratic administration will press forward with our national space program in full realization of the importance of space accomplishments to our national security and our international prestige. We shall reorganize the program to achieve both efficiency and speedy execution. We shall bring top scientists in positions of responsibility. We shall undertake long-term basic research in space science and propulsion.

We shall initiate negotiations leading toward the international regulation of space.

Atomic Energy. The United States became preeminent in the development of atomic energy under Democratic administrations.

The Republican administration, despite its glowing promises of "Atoms for Peace," has permitted the gradual deterioration of United States leadership in atomic development both at home and abroad.

In order to restore United States leadership in atomic development, the new Democratic Administration will:

1. Restore truly non-partisan and vigorous administration of the vital atomic energy program;

2. Continue the development of the various promising experimental and prototype atomic power plants which show promise and provide increasing support for longer range projects at the frontiers of atomic energy application;

3. Continue to preserve and support national laboratories and other federal atomic installations as the foundation of technical progress and bulwark of national defense;

4. Accelerate the Rover nuclear rocket project and auxiliary power facilities so as to achieve world leadership in peaceful outer space exploration;

5. Give reality to the United States international atoms for peace programs and to continue and expand technological assistance to underdeveloped countries;

6. Consider measures for improved organization and procedure for radiation protection and reactor safety, including strengthening the role of the Federal Radiation Council, and the separation of quasi-judicial functions in reactor safety regulations;

7. Provide a balanced and flexible nuclear defense capability, including the augmentation of the nuclear submarine fleet.

Oceanography. Oceanographic research is needed to advance such important programs as food and minerals from our Great Lakes and the sea. The present Administration has neglected this new scientific frontier.

Government Operations

We shall reform the processes of government in all branches -- executive, legislative, and judicial. We will clean out corruption and conflicts of interest, and improve government services.

The Federal Service. Two weeks before this platform was adopted, the difference between the Democratic and Republican attitudes toward government employees was dramatically illustrated. The Democratic Congress passed a fully justified pay increase to bring government pay scales more nearly in line with those of private industry.

The Republican President vetoed the pay raise.

The Democratic Congress decisively overrode the veto.

The heavy responsibilities of modern government require a federal service characterized by devotion to duty, honesty of purpose, and highest competence. We pledge the modernization and strengthening of our civil service system.

We shall extend and improve the employees' appeals system and improve programs for recognizing the outstanding merits of individual employees.

Ethics in Government. We reject totally the concept of dual or triple loyalty on the part of federal officials in high places.

The conflict-of-interest statutes should be revised and strengthened to assure the federal service of maximum security against unethical practices on the part of public officials.

The Democratic administration will establish and enforce a Code of Ethics to maintain the full dignity and integrity of the federal service and to make it more attractive to the ablest men and women.

Regulatory Agencies. The Democratic Party promises to clean up the federal regulatory agencies. The acceptance by Republican appointees to these agencies of gifts, hospitality, and bribes from interests under their jurisdiction has been a particularly flagrant abuse of public trust.

We shall bring all contacts with commissioners into the open, and will protect them from any form of improper pressure.

We shall appoint to these agencies men of ability and independent judgment who understand that their function is to regulate these industries in the public interest.

We promise a thorough review of existing agency practices, with an eye toward speedier decisions, and a clearer definition of what constitutes the public interest.

The Democratic Party condemns the usurpation by the Executive of the powers and functions of any of the independent agencies and pledges the restoration of the independence of such agencies and the protection of their integrity of action.

The Postal Service. The Republican policy has been to treat the United States postal service as a liability instead of a great investment in national enlightenment, social efficiency and economic betterment.

Constant curtailment of service has inconvenienced every citizen.

A program must be undertaken to establish the Post Office Department as a model of efficiency and service. We pledge ourselves to:

1. Restore the principle that the postal service is a public service.

2. Separate the public service costs from those to be borne by the users of the mails.

3. Continue steady improvement in working conditions and wage scales, reflecting increasing productivity.

4. Establish a long-range program for research and capital improvements compatible with the highest standards of business efficiency.

Law Enforcement. In recent years, we have been faced with a shocking increase in crimes of all kinds. Organized criminals have even infiltrated into legitimate business enterprises and labor unions.

The Republican administration, and particularly the Attorney General's office, has failed lamentably to deal with this problem despite the growing power of the underworld. The new Democratic administration will take vigorous corrective action.

Freedom of Information. We reject the Republican contention that the workings of government are the special private preserve of the Executive.

The massive wall of secrecy erected between the Executive branch and the Congress as well as the citizen must be torn down. Information must flow freely, save in those areas in which the national security is involved.

Clean Elections. The Democratic Party favors realistic and effective limitations on contributions and expenditures and full disclosure of campaign financing in federal elections.

We further propose a tax credit to encourage small contributions to political parties.

The Democratic Party affirms that every candidate for public office has a moral obligation to observe and uphold traditional American principles of decency, honesty and fair play in his campaign for election.

We deplore efforts to divide the United States into regional, religious and ethnic groups.

We denounce and repudiate campaign tactics that substitute smear and slander, bigotry and false accusations of bigotry for truth and reasoned argument.

District of Columbia. The Capital city of our nation should be a symbol of democracy to people throughout the world. The Democratic Party reaffirms its long-standing support for home rule for the District of Columbia, and pledges to enact legislation permitting voters of the District to elect their own local government.

We urge the legislatures of the fifty states to ratify the 23rd Amendment, passed by the Democratic Congress, to give District citizens the right to participate in Presidential elections.

We also support a Constitutional Amendment giving the District voting representation in Congress.

Virgin Islands. We believe that the voters of the Virgin Islands should have the right to elect their own Governor, to have a delegate in the Congress of the United States and to have the right to vote in national elections for a President and Vice President of the United States.

Puerto Rico. The social, economic, and political progress of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is a testimonial to the sound enabling legislation, and the sincerity and understanding with which the people of the United States and Puerto Rico are meeting their joint problems.

The Democratic Party, under whose administration the Commonwealth status was established, is entitled to great credit for providing the opportunity which the people of Puerto Rico have used so successfully.

Puerto Rico has become a show-place of world-wide interest, a tribute to the benefits of the principles of self-determination. Further benefits for Puerto Rico under these princples are certain to follow.

Congressional Procedures

In order that the will of the American people may be expressed upon all legislative proposals, we urge that action be taken at the beginning of the 87th Congress to improve Congressional procedures so that majority rule prevails and decisions

 COPYRIGHT 1960 CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY INC. reduction prohibited in whole or in part except by editorial clients can be made after reasonable debate without being blocked by a minority in either House.

The rules of the House of Representatives should be amended so as to make sure that bills reported by legislative committees should reach the floor for consideration without undue delay.

Consumers

In an age of mass production, distribution, and advertising, consumers require effective government representation and protection.

The Republican administration has allowed the Food and Drug Administration to be weakened. Recent Senate hearings on the drug industry have revealed how flagrant profiteering can be when essential facts on costs, prices, and profits are hidden from scrutiny. The new Democratic administration will provide the money and the authority to strengthen this agency for its task.

We propose a consumer counsel, backed by a suitable staff, to speak for consumers in the formulation of government policies and represent consumers in administrative proceedings.

The consumer also has a right to know the cost of credit when he borrows money. We shall enact federal legislation requiring the vendors of credit to provide a statement of specific credit charges and what these charges cost in terms of true annual interest.

Veterans Affairs

We adhere to the American tradition found in the Plymouth Colony in New England in 1636, which holds that:

> "...any soldier injured in defense of the colony shall be maintained competently by the colony for the remainder of his life."

We pledge adequate compensation for those with service connected disabilities. We pledge pensions adequate for a full and dignified life for disabled and distressed veterans and for needy survivors of deceased veterans.

Veterans of World War I, whose federal benefits have not matched those of veterans of subsequent service, will receive the special attention of the Democratic Party looking toward equitable adjustments.

We endorse expanded programs of vocational rehabilitation for disabled veterans, and education for orphans of servicemen.

The quality of medical care furnished to the disabled veterans has deteriorated under the Republican administration. We shall work for an increased availability of facilities for all veterans in need and we will move with particular urgency to fulfill the need for expanded domiciliary and nursing home facilities.

We shall continue the veterans home loan guarantee and direct loan programs and educational benefits patterned after the G.I. Bill of Rights.

American Indians

We recognize the unique legal and moral responsibility of the federal government for Indians and in restitution to the Indians for the injustice that has sometimes been done them. We therefore pledge prompt adoption of a program to assist Indian tribes in the full development of their human and natural resources and to advance the health, education, and economic well-being of Indian citizens while preserving their cultural heritage.

Free consent of the Indian tribes concerned shall be required before the Federal Government makes any change in any federal Indian treaty or other contractual relationship.

The new Democratic administration will bring competent, sympathetic, and dedicated leadership to the administration of Indian affairs which will end practices that have eroded Indian rights and resources, reduced the Indians' land base and repudiated federal responsibility. Indian claims against the United States can and will be settled promptly, whether by negotiation or other means, in the best interests of both parties.

The Arts

The arts flourish where there is freedom and where individual initiative and imagination are encouraged. We enjoy the blessings of such an atmosphere.

The nation should begin to evaluate the possibilities for encouraging and expanding participation in and appreciation of our cultural life.

We propose a federal advisory agency to assist in the evaluation, development, and expansion of cultural resources of the United States. We shall support legislation needed to provide incentives for those endowed with extraordinary talent as a worthy supplement to existing scholarship programs.

Civil Liberties

Today with democratic values threatened by Communist tyranny, we reaffirm our dedication to the Bill of Rights. Freedom and civil liberties, far from being incompatible with security, are vital to our national strength. Unfortunately, those high in the Republican administration have all too often sullied the name and honor of loyal and faithful American citizens in and out of government.

The Democratic Party will strive to improve Congressional investigating and hearing procedures. We shall abolish useless disclaimer affidavits such as those for student educational loans. We shall provide a full and fair hearing, including confrontation of the accuser, to any person whose public or private employment or reputation is jeopardized by a loyalty or security proceeding.

Protection of rights of American citizens to travel, to pursue lawful trade and to engage in other lawful activities abroad without distinction as to race or religion is a cardinal function of the national sovereignty.

We will oppose any international agreement or treaty which by its terms or practices differentiates among American citizens on grounds of race or religion.

* * * * *

The list of unfinished business for America is long. The accumulated neglect of nearly a decade cannot be wiped out overnight. Many of the objectives which we seek will require our best efforts over a period of years.

Although the task is far-reaching, we will tackle it with vigor and confidence. We will substitute planning for confusion, purpose for indifference, direction for drift and apathy.

We will organize the policy-making machinery of the executive branch to provide vigor and leadership in establishing our national goals, and achieving them.

The new Democratic President will sign, not veto, the efforts of a Democratic Congress to create more jobs, to build more homes, to save family farms, to clean up polluted streams and rivers, to help depressed areas, and to provide full employment for our people.

Fiscal Responsibility

We vigorously reject the notion that America, with a half-trillion-dollar gross national product, and nearly half of the world's industrial resources, cannot afford to meet the needs of her people at home and in our world relationships.

We believe, moreover, that except in periods of recessions or national emergency, these needs can be met with a balanced budget, with no increase in present tax rates, and with some surplus for the gradual reduction of our national debt.

To assure such a balance we shall pursue a four-point program of fiscal responsibility.

First, we shall end the gross waste in federal expenditures which needlessly raises the budgets of many government agencies.

The most conspicuous unnecessary item is, of course, the excessive cost of interest on the national debt. Courageous action to end duplication and competition among the armed services will achieve large savings. The cost of the agricultural program can be reduced while at the same time restoring prosperity to the nation's farmers.

Second, we shall collect the billions in taxes which are owed to the federal government but not now collected.

The Internal Revenue Service is still suffering from the cuts inflicted upon its enforcement staff by the Republican administration and the Republican Congress in 1953.

The Administration's own Commissioner of Internal Revenue has testified that billions of dollars in revenue are lost each year because the Service does not have sufficient agents to follow up on tax evasion.

We will add enforcement personnel, and develop new techniques of enforcement, to collect tax revenue which is now being lost through evasion.

Third, we shall close the loopholes in the tax laws by which certain privileged groups legally escape their fair share of taxation.

Among the more conspicuous loopholes are depletion allowances which are inequitable, special consideration for recipients of dividend income, and deductions for extravagant "business expenses" which have reached scandalous proportions.

Tax reform can raise additional revenue and at the same time increase legitimate incentives for growth, and make it possible to ease the burden on the general taxpayer who now pays an unfair share of taxes because of special favors to the few.

Fourth, we shall bring in added federal tax revenues by expanding the economy itself. Each dollar of additional production puts an additional 18 cents in tax revenue in the national treasury. A 5 percent growth rate, therefore, will yield over $40 billion in added revenue in four years at present tax rates.

By these four methods we can sharply increase the government funds available for needed services, for correction of tax inequities, and for debt or tax reduction.

Much of the challenge of the 1960's, however, remains unforeseen and unforeseeable.

If, therefore, the unfolding demands of the new decade at home or abroad should impose clear national responsibilities that cannot be fulfilled without higher taxes, we will not allow political disadvantage to deter us from doing what is required.

As we proceed with the urgent task of restoring America's productivity, confidence, and power, we will never forget that our national interest is more than the sum total of all the group interests in America.

When group interests conflict with the national interest, it will be the national interest which we serve.

IV.

On its values and goals the quality of American life depends. Here above all our national interest and our devotion to the Rights of Man coincide.

Democratic administrations under Wilson, Roosevelt, and Truman led the way in pressing for economic justice for all Americans.

But man does not live by bread alone. A new Democratic administration, like its predecessors, will once again look beyond material goals to the spiritual meaning of American society.

We have drifted into a national mood that accepts payola and quiz scandals, tax evasion and false expense accounts, soaring crime rates, influence-peddling in high government circles, and the exploitation of sadistic violence as popular entertainment.

For eight long critical years our present national leadership has made no effective effort to reverse this mood.

The new Democratic administration will help create a sense of national purpose and higher standards of public behavior.

Civil Rights

We shall also seek to create an affirmative new atmosphere in which to deal with racial divisions and inequalities which threaten both the integrity of our democratic faith and the proposition on which our nation was founded -- that all men are created equal. It is our faith in human dignity that distinguishes our open free society from the closed totalitarian society of the Communists.

The Constitution of the United States rejects the notion that the Rights of Man means the rights of some men only. We reject it too. The right to vote is the first principle of self-government. The Constitution also guarantees to all Americans the equal protection of the laws.

It is the duty of the Congress to enact the laws necessary and proper to protect and promote these Constitutional rights. The Supreme Court has the power to interpret these rights and the laws thus enacted.

It is the duty of the President to see that these rights are respected and the Constitution and laws as interpreted by the Supreme Court are faithfully executed.

What is now required is effective moral and political leadership by the whole executive branch of our government to make equal opportunity a living reality for all Americans.

As the party of Jefferson, we shall provide that leadership.

In every city and state in greater or lesser degree there is discrimination based on color, race, religion, or national origin.

If discrimination in voting, education, the administration of justice or segregated lunchcounters are the issues in one area, discrimination in housing and employment may be pressing questions elsewhere.

The peaceful demonstrations for first-class citizenship which have recently taken place in many parts of this country are a signal to all of us to make good at long last the guarantees of our Constitution.

The time has come to assure equal access for all Americans to all areas of community life, including voting booths, schoolrooms, jobs, housing, and public facilities.

The Democratic administration which takes office next January will therefore use the full powers provided in the Civil Rights Act of 1957 and 1960 to secure for all Americans the right to vote.

If these powers, vigorously invoked by a new Attorney General and backed by a strong and imaginative Democratic President, prove inadequate, further powers will be sought.

We will support whatever action is necessary to eliminate literacy tests and the payment of poll taxes as requirements for voting.

A new Democratic administration will also use its full powers -- legal and moral -- to ensure the beginning of good faith compliance with the Constitutional requirement that racial discrimination be ended in public education.

We believe that every school district affected by the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision should submit a plan providing for at least first-step compliance by 1963, the 100th anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation.

To facilitate compliance, technical and financial assistance should be given to school districts facing special problems of transition.

For this and for the protection of all other Constitutional rights of Americans, the Attorney General should be empowered and directed to file civil injunction suits in federal courts to prevent the denial of any civil rights on grounds of race, creed, or color.

The new Democratic administration will support federal legislation establishing a Fair Employment Practices Commission effectively to secure for everyone the right to equal opportunity for employment.

In 1949 the President's Committee on Civil Rights recommended a permanent Commission on Civil Rights. The new Democratic administration will broaden the scope and strengthen the powers of the present commission and make it permanent.

Its functions will be to provide assistance to communities, industries, or individuals in the implementation of Constitutional rights in education, housing, employment, transportation, and the administration of justice.

In addition the Democratic administration will use its full executive powers to assure equal employment opportunities and to terminate racial segregation throughout federal services and institutions, and on all government contracts. The successful desegregation of the armed services took place through such decisive executive action under President Truman.

Similarly the new Democratic administration will take action to end discrimination in federal housing programs, including federally-assisted housing.

To accomplish these goals will require executive orders, legal actions brought by the Attorney General, legislation, and improved Congressional procedures to safeguard majority rule.

Above all, it will require the strong, active, persuasive, and inventive leadership of the President of the United States.

* * * * *

The Democratic President who takes office next January will face unprecedented challenges. His administration will present a new face to the world.

It will be a bold, confident, affirmative face. We will draw new strength from the universal truths which the founder of our party asserted in the Declaration of Independence to be "self-evident."

Emerson once spoke of an unending contest in human affairs a contest between the Party of Hope and the Party of Memory.

For eight years, America, governed by the Party of Memory, has taken a holiday from history.

As the Party of Hope it is our responsibility and opportunity to call forth the greatness of the American people.

In this spirit, we hereby rededicate ourselves to the continuing service of the Rights of Man -- everywhere in America and everywhere else on God's earth.

1960 REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

Republicans Nominate Nixon on First Ballot, Choose Henry Cabot Lodge as Running Mate

The 1960 Republican National Convention, meeting in Chicago July 25-28, nominated Vice President Richard M. Nixon of California for President and U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts for Vice President. It also adopted a platform designed largely to attract the independent voter.

Although New York Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller, with whom Nixon reached an agreement on platform principles July 23, was given an outside chance for the nomination, and conservatives urged the nomination of Sen. Barry Goldwater (Ariz.), Nixon's victory was never in doubt. Rockefeller threw his New York delegation to Nixon July 26 at the conclusion of their successful fight for a more liberal platform. Goldwater July 27 withdrew his name from nomination and asked conservatives to give the ticket their full support.

In Lodge, Nixon chose a running mate from the Eastern internationalist wing of the GOP, a man with 14 years' experience in the U.S. Senate (1937-44; 1947-53) and seven years' experience representing the Nation in the UN (1953-60), a good war record and sufficient political skill to have been one of the managers of Dwight D. Eisenhower's Presidential campaign in 1952. Like the Democratic Presidential nominee, John F. Kennedy, Lodge was from Massachusetts, and it was Kennedy, in fact, who defeated Lodge for the Senate in 1952.

Nixon's command of the party was evident in his margin of victory on the first ballot (1,321 votes to 10 for Goldwater) and in the manner in which he worked July 25-26 to get the Platform Committee to revise an "unsatisfactory" first version of the platform by inserting a much stronger civil rights section and pledges of greater defense efforts.

In a convention in which there was repeated emphasis on foreign policy and the Republicans' capacity to implement it, the selection of Lodge was indicated from the beginning. Midwesterners were reluctant but in the end Lodge's name was the only one put in nomination, and he received 1,330 of 1,331 votes on the first ballot.

Nixon was the first Vice President to be nominated from that office to the Presidency since Martin Van Buren in 1835. He was the first Quaker and the first Californian to be nominated since Herbert Hoover in 1928. The only previous Californian nominated was the GOP's first Presidential candidate, John C. Fremont in 1856.

Nixon, when nominated, was 47. He was elected to the House (R Calif.) in 1946, the Senate (R Calif.) in 1950 and the Vice Presidency in 1952 and 1956. For years he was widely assumed to be a candidate for the 1960 nomination, but it was not until Jan. 8, 1960 that his office announced he was permitting his name to be entered in several primaries, making his candidacy formal.

Major convention events are described in detail below:

Keynote Address, Rules

In the keynote address July 25, Rep. Walter H. Judd (Minn.) answered Democratic charges against the GOP, catalogued the achievements of the Eisenhower Administration and castigated the two men Republicans were to attack throughout the convention: Democratic Presidential nominee John F. Kennedy and Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev.

Judd also sounded a theme that was to recur throughout the convention: "We Republicans deeply believe that the first function of our Government is to protect the liberty of the individual citizen, not to take it away.... Rights are not what our Government must do for us; rights are what our Government cannot do to us."

He said that while the Republican Administration resisted the growth of Government, it "moved vigorously whenever and wherever (such action) is the proper and best way to deal with any problem affecting public safety and the people's welfare." He said the Eisenhower years were "undeniably...the best seven-year period in the history of the United States," bringing "prosperity without war -- something our predecessors had never been able to do in this century." He said Mr. Eisenhower had stopped inflation and brought price stability "not by changing our free system but by using it," by removing controls.

Judd said a "standard market basket of groceries" cost a worker 13 hours of labor in 1945, 13.7 hours in 1952 and 10 hours in 1959.

Discussing foreign and defense policies, Judd claimed the Eisenhower Administration had brought "peace with honor". He said the U.S. needed leaders who understood the Communist world conspiracy and asked, "How many of us understand our own system well enough to sell it to others with contagious enthusiasm?.... The man who will be nominated in this convention...will be incomparably the best qualified to deal with the relentless cold war."

Judd said the Administration "found a missile gap and has managed to get it almost closed." In other speeches July 25, former President Herbert Hoover told the convention, "Today, America is in the midst of a frightening moral slump." He called for a "rebirth of that spirit which lies within that word, America."

GOP National Chairman Thruston B. Morton charged Kennedy had suggested apologizing to Khrushchev on the U-2 incident.

Temporary Chairman Cecil H. Underwood, Governor of West Virginia, spoke of Kennedy's youth, his "inexperience" and "the low road of mud, threat and smears" in Kennedy's acceptance speech.

Convention rules and credential reports were adopted without dissent July 26.

REPUBLICANS ADOPT 1960 PLATFORM AFTER CONFLICTS . . .

Platform

The convention July 27 adopted the 1960 Republican platform by voice vote with only a scattering of nays heard.

Highlights of the platform follow. (For full text see p. 794)

PLATFORM HIGHLIGHTS

Foreign Policy -- "To nullify the Soviet conspiracy is our greatest task." It requires that the Nation remain "inflexible against every tyrannical encroachment" and "maintain an armed power exceeded by no other." Aid to the developing nations must be continued, with emphasis on "the increasing use of private capital and government loans, rather than outright grants."

Defense -- "There is no price ceiling on America's security. The United States can and must provide whatever is necessary to insure its own security and that of the free world...." This will require, among other things, "continuation of the 'long-pull' preparedness policies" inaugurated by the Eisenhower Administration.

Economic Growth -- "We must quicken the pace of our economic growth," recognizing that "its mainspring lies in the private sector of the economy." Steps required include tax reform, involving "realistic incentive depreciation schedules," and "maintenance of a stable dollar."

Agriculture -- Rejecting promises of specific price support levels as "cruel deceptions," the plank pledged to "improve and stabilize farm family income" by such steps as "a large-scale land conservation reserve program" and "expansion of the Rural Development Program."

Education -- "Primary responsibility for education must remain with the local community and state." But federal aid should be provided for school construction and college housing, extension of student loan programs, and "consideration of means through tax laws to help offset tuition costs."

Health -- "The aged needing it" should be helped to meet medical care costs through a contributory system providing "the option of purchasing private health insurance."

BACKGROUND

The near-unanimity of passage belied the fights over the civil rights and defense planks. These gave a convention whose Presidential nominee was acknowledged to be Vice President Richard M. Nixon before the sessions began its greatest drama. The platform fight proved for Nixon a harder task than nailing down the nomination and served, with the emergence of a platform largely of his his own molding, to confirm his position as the new leader of the Republican party.

President Defends Record, Criticizes 'Pessimists'

Addressing the Republican National Convention's "Ike Day" session July 26, President Eisenhower called on Republicans to "talk only the truth" in the 1960 campaign and said a fervent presentation of the facts would insure that "the next President of the United States will be a Republican".

The President delivered what amounted to a stout defense of his nearly eight years in office, and said he had "difficulty in restraining my feelings of indignation" at efforts to "belittle" the Nation's achievements in defense, economic growth, domestic welfare and relations with other nations under Republican administration.

He made these points:

Economic Growth -- The gross national product, measured in constant dollars, had increased by $100 billion or 25 percent during Eisenhower's tenure, whereas the GNP had decreased in every peacetime year but one of the Truman Administration and "whatever economic growth was realized during the previous Administration occurred mainly under wartime conditions."

The total price rise had been kept below 11 percent during the Eisenhower years, whereas "inflation -- the most insidious and cruel form of taxation ever devised -- drove prices up 48 percent in the previous administration, thus robbing millions of our people of savings and purchasing power." In 1960, the President said, "There are more Americans...employed, at higher wages and with more take-home pay than ever before in our history."

Mr. Eisenhower said he had "heard much from the opposition -- especially from its free-spending clique -- about increasing the rate of economic growth" through governmental activity and expenditures. He said Republicans "reject the argument that healthy growth can thus be bought from the funds of the federal treasury" and "believe profoundly that constant and unnecessary governmental meddling in our economy leads to a standardized, weakened, and tasteless society that encourages dull mediocrity." On the other hand, the President said, "private enterprise, dependent upon the vigor of healthful competition, leads to individual responsibility, pride of accomplishment, and above all, national strength. This has always been, is now -- and I pray will always be -- basic Republican doctrine."

Domestic Achievements -- The President said that in addition to material accomplishments, the U.S. educational structure "has been expanded", "a higher percentage of Americans than ever before own their own homes", "unprecedented" advances had been made in science and technology, research and development funds were two and one-half times greater than seven years ago, 50 million more Americans were covered by private medical and hospital insurance, medical research "has expanded five times", an additional 7½ million persons were covered by Social Security, and at the same time "a budgetary surplus has been achieved, fiscal responsibility has been maintained, and confidence restored."

. . . NIXON AND ROCKEFELLER AGREE ON "14 POINTS"

The shaping of the platform began with the publication Feb. 12 of "Decisions for a Better America", the report of the GOP Committee on Program and Progress, formed Feb. 25, 1959. The chairman of that committee, Charles H. Percy of Illinois, was named May 11, 1960 as chairman of the 1960 GOP Resolutions (Platform) Committee.

PLATFORM HEARINGS

Eight platform subcommittees were established to hold hearings on: foreign policy; national defense; labor and commerce; agriculture and natural resources; education, science and technology; government finance and administration; civil rights and immigration; health, housing, urban problems, veterans and welfare. Party leaders and special interest groups were invited to testify before the 103-man committee or its subcommittees on July 19, 20 and 21.

Among those testifying July 19 were Sen. Barry Goldwater (Ariz.) who articulated the position of party conservatives, and New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, unofficial spokesman of the liberal Republicans. Goldwater said that in foreign affairs "we have moved with timidity and indecision". In domestic affairs, he condemned the "welfare state", saying there had been no national demand for more federal welfare programs. Rockefeller said the balance of world power had shifted to the Soviet Union and called for a "grand design" of regional alliances to make the free world strong. (For Rockefeller's comment was just one in a series of attacks by him on various Administration programs and policies. Nixon, in an apparent move to come to grips with this independent spokesman for a large portion of the party, July 22 called Rockefeller and the result was a meeting that night and into the morning of July 23 at Rockefeller's New York City home. Rockefeller later that day released a list of 14 "specific positions" on foreign policy, national defense and domestic affairs both he and Nixon agreed on, and Nixon released a brief statement of concurrence.

PLATFORM CONFLICTS

Platform subcommittees worked on drafts over the weekend of July 22-24 and by the time Nixon arrived in Chicago July 25, the platform was in all but final form. The civil rights subcommittee worked through the night of July 24th and at 7 a.m. adopted a "moderate" civil rights plank over the objections of subcommittee chairman Joseph F. Carlino, speaker of the New York assembly and a representative of Rockefeller.

Carlino walked out of the meeting after it turned down his own more liberal proposal and shortly after, Rockefeller said he and the New York delegation were prepared to make a fight on the convention floor for a stronger plank.

Nixon, on his arrival, said a Presidential nominee could not run on a platform which did not express his views on major issues. He said he expected a strong platform and that he had not "lost faith" in the ability of the Platform Committee to produce an "acceptable" platform. He said he was confident "we" would win any floor fight on the platform if one became necessary.

He canceled his afternoon program for meeting with various state delegations and worked to change the civil rights plank. Nixon, who July 21 had given the Platform Committee a proposed civil rights plank described as "strong", July 25 said he was "not wedded to any particular language" but that a strong plank was "essential". The plank adopted by the civil rights subcommittee he deemed "unsatisfactory".

Goldwater, meanwhile, said that although the Presidential nominee had a "certain right" to influence the party platform, he hoped Nixon "would not push too hard on it," because the party's committee had already made its decisions.

On July 26 Nixon prevailed and the Platform Committee, in two ballots on technicalities, voted 55-41 and 52-43 to make reconsideration possible. It then voted 50-35 to reconsider the civil rights plank. Later in the day the Platform Committee voted 56-28 to accept a stronger plank which Nixon had approved.

Southern delegates were unhappy with the plank but a threatened floor fight with a minority report never materialized.

Rockefeller was reported to be "disappointed" with some of the language, but he later told the New York delegation he was "delighted that the Platform Committee has paved the way for a strong, clear and affirmative civil rights plank."

DEFENSE FIGHT

The other lengthy platform fight was over the defense plank. The Rockefeller-Nixon 14 points had emphasized increased efforts in defense areas; the Eisenhower Administration had stated that present programs were adequate.

The President July 25 had been shown the defense plank as first accepted by the committee and he said it was "pretty good". Rockefeller July 25 said it might be necessary to wage a floor fight on that plank also as it "does not face up realistically to the dangers that threaten the Nation."

The Platform Commttee July 26 by voice vote decided to reconsider the defense plank, and Rep. Glenard P. Lipscomb (Calif.), defense subcommittee chairman, sponsored most of the changes which Nixon requested. Percy July 27 said the President was consulted by phone July 26 on the final changes in the plank and gave his approval.

Rockefeller said he was "gratified at the committee's action in recognizing the vital importance of an intensified defense effort."

The final platform was adopted unanimously by the committee.

Percy presented the platform to the convention in the form of excerpts and descriptive language. The presentation, like that of the Democrats, was accompanied by movies illustrating past and present conditions. Percy and other Republicans scolded the Democrats for pessimism about economic conditions, and the Republican movies emphasized "GOP prosperity". Percy said, "This is the good side of America."

GOP CHOOSES NIXON AS PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE . . .

Presidential Nomination

There was little doubt that Vice President Nixon would be the 1960 GOP nominee for the Presidency. The only threats to Nixon, if they could be called that, came from supporters of Rockefeller and Goldwater. Each had a noisy and well-financed campaign going for him in Chicago, but neither had the widespread backing across the Nation, the solid ties to party workers at every level that Nixon had built in seven years as Vice President.

Goldwater's strength came officially from two delegations, Arizona, his home state, and South Carolina, which March 26 had instructed its delegation to support him. He had farreaching support among Southern delegates and scattered support from conservatives throughout the country.

Goldwater became the focal point for the efforts of GOP conservatives. As chairman of the GOP Senatorial Campaign Committee he had traveled throughout the U.S. and had long backed Nixon for the nomination. He had been mentioned as a Vice Presidential possibility for months but as the convention neared, and particularly after Nixon's 14-point platform statement with Rockefeller, conservatives began to talk seriously of Goldwater as a Presidential hope. Goldwater July 25 said the pressure to become more than a favorite-son candidate was "very great".

Rockefeller withdrew formally from the GOP Presidential race Dec. 26, 1959. His continued activity in the latter part of the spring and early summer of 1960, however, and particularly his outspoken criticism of policies of the Eisenhower Administration, led many to think he had serious hopes of a draft. A Draft-Rockefeller Committee was hard at work in Chicago, and Rockefeller, while repeating he was not a candidate, refused to endorse Nixon specifically; he said May 25 he would accept a draft. Although Rockefeller said repeatedly he would not accept the Vice Presidential nomination, there was considerable talk of nominating him for the second place on the ticket.

ARRIVAL IN CHICAGO

Goldwater and Rockefeller both arrived in Chicago before Nixon. Goldwater July 25 said he did not yet know whether his name would be placed in nomination seriously. Rockefeller, saying that he was working only for a stronger platform, still had not endorsed Nixon. Workers in Rockefeller's behalf were crying "Nixon can't win" and Rockefeller had the support of Harold Stassen and Agriculture Secretary Ezra Taft Benson.

As Nixon arrived July 25 the platform turmoil, the Rockefeller and Goldwater movements and Vice Presidential speculation gave the preconvention scene a chaotic air. Nixon flew in just as the first convention session was in progress.

He reminded his enthusiastic greeters that this was a time of two anniversaries for him: eight years earlier he had been nominated for the Vice Presidency for the first time in Chicago and a year earlier he had had his famous "kitchen talk" with Soviet Premier Khrushchev.

In airport speeches and in a press conference soon after, Nixon let it be known that he would take a firm hand in the selection of the Vice Presidential candidate, that he expected differences within the party but he also expected them to be patched up, that the platform, as drafted, was unacceptable to him, that he planned to meet with Platform Committee members and work to change it but if necessary he would take the fight to the floor and was confident "we" would win if he did.

After lengthy discussion and persuasion by Nixon the Platform Committee July 26 adopted stronger defense and civil rights planks.

Rockefeller July 26 told the New York caucus that he was "delighted" at the changes and while he was "moved" by support he had received for the Presidential nomination, he asked the New York delegation unanimously to endorse Nixon.

Goldwater July 27 asked the Arizona delegation not to place his name in nomination and said he would withdraw if it did so.

With Nixon's nomination assured, the convention July 27 voted to change restrictions on the number of persons who could second a nominating speech, for that session.

NOMINATING SESSION

The nominating session for the Presidency took place July 27, after the platform had been adopted. First, the roll was called to permit states to place names in nomination. Alabama yielded to Oregon, whose Governor, Mark O. Hatfield, was to place Nixon's name in nomination. Arizona announced that its Governor, Paul Fannin, would nominate Goldwater, despite Goldwater's instructions not to. No other states placed names in nomination.

Hatfield began his nominating speech with an attack on Democratic nominee Kennedy: "Ladies and gentlemen, the White House is not for sale." In a four-minute speech, he catalogued Nixon's experience, saying, "Our country has a man to match the momentous need." Hatfield's placing of Nixon's name in nomination was followed by a 17-minute demonstration. Nixon was seconded by Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (Calif.), Rhode Island Gov. Christopher Del Sesto, Mrs. Jewel Rogers, Illinois lawyer, Robert A. Taft Jr. of Ohio, John Roosevelt of New York, the Republican son of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt (D), Mrs. Andrew Williams of Washington, the granddaughter of President Theodore Roosevelt, Robert Gavin, GOP candidate for Governor of South Carolina, and Sen. Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.).

Fannin then placed Goldwater's name in nomination, disregarding Goldwater's request that he not do so because "this is not an ordinary situation." He spoke of the popular enthusiasm for Goldwater. Goldwater was seconded by Rep. Bruce Alger (Texas), Greg Shorey, South Carolina state chairman, Roy Houck, delegate from South Dakota, and Rep. John J. Rhodes (Ariz.).

Goldwater then asked that his name be withdrawn from nomination and was greeted with loud shouts of "No". He requested he be permitted to say something he thought would be of help in the election. He told the convention Republicans had been losing elections "not because of too many Democrat votes.... We have been losing elections because conservatives too often failed to vote.... Let's grow up, conservatives!" He asked that delegates supporting him vote for Nixon instead. His name was ruled withdrawn.

After Goldwater's remarks, the balloting began. When Arizona was reached in the call of the states, it cast its votes for Nixon and moved the nomination be made by acclamation. Chairman Halleck ruled that the entire roll must be called before such a motion was in order. All states thereafter cast all their votes for Nixon except Louisiana, which gave 10 of its 16 to Goldwater.

. . . NAMES HENRY CABOT LODGE FOR VICE PRESIDENCY

At the end of the call, with Nixon having 1,321 votes and Goldwater 10, Louisiana moved that the vote be made unanimous. Halleck suggested Louisiana change its 10 Goldwater votes to Nixon in order to make the results unanimous. Louisiana said it would not change its vote, asked to poll its delegation and then changed its motion to request that the convention make the nomination by acclamation. Halleck ruled that if Louisiana did not change its vote the totals would be read as they stood at the end of the balloting: Nixon 1,321; Goldwater, 10.

Arizona then moved that the nomination be made "unanimous" and the convention accepted this by a voice vote, Halleck ruled, despite audible "noes."

The Vice Presidency

In the months before the convention, the name of New York's Governor Rockefeller was mentioned frequently as a Vice Presidential possibility.

Other names mentioned frequently were those of U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts and Republican National Chairman Thruston B. Morton of Kentucky, a U.S. Senator. There were movements also for Sens. Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois, Jacob K. Javits of New York, Barry Goldwater of Arizona and for Secretary of Interior Fred A. Seaton, Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell and Reps. Gerald R. Ford Jr. (Mich.) and Walter H. Judd (Minn.).

As the convention neared, speculation narrowed to Lodge and Morton. Rockefeller appeared to be excluded July 23 when Nixon said he accepted the New Yorker's statement that he did not want the second spot.

Nixon, on arriving in Chicago July 25, said he had not made a "final decision" on his running mate. News reports July 25-26 said both President Eisenhower and former President Herbert Hoover favored Lodge.

Seven Republican Governors met July 25 and their spokesman, Illinois Gov. William G. Stratton, announced, "The general consensus was that there should be a number of nominations for Vice President"; the job should not "be foreclosed as it was in Los Angeles." Indiana Gov. Harold W. Handley said, however, "This is no rebellion." He said the Governors would go along with whatever Nixon decided. Other Governors at the meeting were: Robert E. Smylie of Idaho, Mark O. Hatfield of Oregon, Hugo Aronson of Montana, J. Caleb Boggs of Delaware and Christopher Del Sesto of Rhode Island.

As indications grew that the nominee would be Lodge, former Indiana Gov. Ralph F. Gates (1945-1949) July 25 said, "I say that if Lodge is handed to us we should get up on the floor and make a fight of it. We in the Midwest should get some recognition." Handley July 27 met with Nixon and reported, "I told him we hoped to see a balanced ticket.... I also mentioned that Mr. Lodge would hurt the Republican ticket in Indiana."

Whether to head off trouble from Midwestern areas or for other reasons, Nixon July 26 asked that the selection of the Vice Presidential candidate be put off to July 28, instead of July 27, as originally scheduled.

Hatfield July 26 led a group of Governors to meet Rockefeller in an effort to persuade him to accept the Vice Presidency.

Nixon July 27 announced the names of four men who he said were "front runners" for the nomination. The four: Lodge, Morton, Judd and Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson. After Nixon's nomination July 27, he went into a late meeting with "25 or 30" Republican leaders to settle the selection of the Vice President.

Early July 28 Nixon called Lodge in New York to say he would "recommend" Lodge's name to the convention.

Most of the early dissent to Lodge evaporated. Handley July 28 said, "We have tried in every way to point out that the great Midwest...should be represented on the ticket.... Apparently Mr. Nixon has decided that the 1960 campaign must be fought on foreign policy issues."

Goldwater backers July 22 had said, "Too many Republicans of the regular GOP organization remember Henry Cabot Lodge as the man who knifed the late Sen. Robert Taft in the back in 1952." Goldwater himself July 27 said Morton was his own choice but Lodge was "acceptable."

The nomination took place July 28. Judd nominated Lodge, and there were eight seconders: John Volpe, Massachusetts GOP gubernatorial candidate; former Sen. John W. Bricker (Ohio 1947-59); Benjamin Adamowski, state's attorney of Cook County, Ill.; Dr. John C. Woodland; Mrs. Katherine Neuberger, President of the New Jersey Federation of Republican Women; San Francisco Mayor George Christopher; vice chairman of the Republican Central Committee of Iowa, Mrs. Bess Cowden; and Rep. Ford (Mich.)

Lodge was the only candidate nominated. He received 1,330 convention votes on the roll call. Edwin S. Mayer of Texas abstained, later telling a reporter he was a supporter of Goldwater. Mayer changed his vote at the end of the call, making Lodge's nomination unanimous.

COMPLETE TEXT OF 1960 REPUBLICAN PLATFORM

Following is the complete text of the 1960 platform, entitled "Building a Better America", adopted by the Republican National Convention July 27:

Building a Better America

Preamble

The United States is living in an age of profoundest revolution. The lives of men and of nations are undergoing such transformations as history has rarely recorded. The birth of new nations, the impact of new machines, the threat of new weapons, the stirring of new ideas, the ascent into a new dimension of the universe -- everywhere the accent falls on the new.

At such a time of world upheaval, great perils match great opportunities -- and hopes, as well as fears, rise in all areas of human life. Such a force as nuclear power symbolizes the greatness of the choice before the United States and mankind. The energy of the atom could bring devastation to humanity. Or it could be made to serve men's hopes for peace and progress -- to make for all peoples a more healthy and secure and prosperous life than man has ever known.

One fact darkens the reasonable hopes of free men: the growing vigor and thrust of Communist imperialism. Everywhere across the earth, this force challenges us to prove our strength and wisdom, our capacity for sacrifice, our faith in ourselves and in our institutions.

Free men look to us for leadership and support, which we dedicate ourselves to give out of the abundance of our national strength.

The fate of the world will be deeply affected, perhaps determined, by the quality of American leadership. American leadership means both how we govern ourselves and how we help to influence others. We deliberate the choice of national leadership and policy, mindful that in some measure our proposals involve the fate of mankind.

The leadership of the United States must be responsible and mature; its promises must be rational and practical, soberly pledged and faithfully undertaken. Its purposes and its aspirations must ascend to that high ground of right and freedom upon which mankind may dwell and progress in decent security.

We are impressed, but not dismayed, by the revolutionary turbulence that is wracking the world. In the midst of violence and change, we draw strength and confidence from the changeless principles of our free Constitution. Free men are invincible when the power and courage, the patience and the fortitude latent in them are drawn forth by reasoned appeal.

In this Republican Platform we offer to the United States our program -- our call to service, our pledge of leadership, our proposal of measures in the public interest. We call upon God, in whose hand is every blessing, to favor our deliberations with wisdom, our nation with endurance, and troubled mankind everywhere with a righteous peace.

Foreign Policy

The Republican Party asserts that the sovereign purpose of our foreign policy is to secure the free institutions of our nation against every peril; to hearten and fortify the love of freedom everywhere in the world; and to achieve a just peace for all of anxious humanity.

The pre-eminence of this Republic requires of us a vigorous, resolute foreign policy -- inflexible against every tyrannical encroachment, and mighty in its advance toward our own affirmative goals.

The Government of the United States, under the Administration of President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon, has demonstrated that firmness in the face of threatened aggression is the most dependable safeguard of peace. We now reaffirm our determination to defend the security and the freedom of our country, to honor our commitments to our allies at whatever cost or sacrifice, and never to submit to force or threats. Our determination to stand fast has forestalled aggression before Berlin, in the Formosa Straits, and in Lebanon. Since 1954 no free nation has fallen victim behind the Iron Curtain. We mean to adhere to the policy of firmness that has served us so well.

We are unalterably committed to maintaining the security, freedom and solidarity of the Western Hemisphere. We support President Eisenhower's reaffirmation of the Monroe Doctrine in all its vitality. Faithful to our treaty commitments, we shall join the Republics of the Americas against any intervention in our hemisphere, and in refusing to tolerate the establishment in this hemisphere of any government dominated by the foreign rule of communism.

In the Middle East, we shall continue to support the integrity and independence of all the states of that area including Israel and the Arab States.

With specific reference to Israel and the Arab Nations we urge them to undertake negotiations for a mutually acceptable settlement of the causes of tension between them. We pledge continued efforts:

- To eliminate the obstacles to a lasting peace in the area, including the human problem of the Arab refugees.
- To seek an end to transit and trade restrictions, blockades and boycotts.
- To secure freedom of navigation in international waterways, the cessation of discrimination against Americans on the basis of religious beliefs, and an end to the wasteful and dangerous arms race and to the threat of an arms imbalance in the area."

Recognition of Communist China and its admission to the United Nations have been firmly opposed by the Republican Administration. We will continue in this opposition because of compelling evidence that to do otherwise would weaken the cause of freedom and endanger the future of the free peoples of Asia and the world. The brutal suppression of the human rights and the religious traditions of the Tibetan people is an unhappy evidence of the need to persist in our policy.

The countries of the free world have been benefited, reinforced and drawn closer together by the vigor of American support of the United Nations, and by our participation in such regional organizations as NATO, SEATO, CENTO, the Organization of American States and other collective security alliances. We assert our intention steadfastly to uphold the action and principles of those bodies.

We believe military assistance to our allies under the mutual security program should be continued with all the vigor and funds needed to maintain the strength of our alliances at levels essential to our common safety.

The firm diplomacy of the Eisenhower-Nixon Administration has been supported by a military power superior to any in the history of our nation or in the world. As long as world tensions menace us with war, we are resolved to maintain an armed power exceeded by no other.

Under Republican administration, the Government has developed original and constructive programs in many fields -- open skies, atoms for peace, cultural and technical exchanges, the peaceful uses of outer space and Antarctica -- to make known to men everywhere our desire to advance the cause of peace. We mean, as a Party, to continue in the same course.

We recognize and freely acknowledge the support given to these principles and policies by all Americans, irrespective of party. Standing as they do above partisan challenge, such principles and policies will, we earnestly hope, continue to have bi-partisan support.

We established a new independent agency, the United States Information Agency, fully recognizing the tremendous importance of the struggle for men's minds. Today, our information program throughout the world is a greatly improved medium for explaining our policies and actions to audiences overseas, answering Communist propaganda and projecting a true image of American life and culture.

This is the Republican record. We rededicate ourselves to the principles that have animated it; and we pledge ourselves to persist in those principles, and to apply them to the problems, the occasions and the opportunities to be faced by the new Administration.

We confront today the global offensive of Communism, increasingly aggressive and violent in its enterprises. The agency of that offensive is Soviet policy, aimed at the subversion of the world.

Recently we have noted Soviet Union pretexts to intervene in the affairs of newly independent countries, accompanied by threats of the use of nuclear weapons. Such interventions constitute a form of subversion against the sovereignty of these new nations and a direct challenge to the United Nations.

The immediate strategy of the Soviet imperialists is to destroy the world's confidence in America's desire for peace; to threaten with violence our mutual security arrangements; and to sever the bonds of amity and respect among the free nations. To nullify the Soviet conspiracy is our greatest task. The United States faces this challenge, and resolves to meet it with courage and confidence.

To this end we will continue to support and strengthen the United Nations as an instrument for peace, for international cooperation, and for the advancement of the fundamental freedoms and humane interests of mankind.

Under the United Nations we will work for the peaceful settlement of international disputes, and the extension of the rule of law in the world.

And, in furtherance of President Eisenhower's proposals for the peaceful use of space, we suggest that the United Nations take the initiative to develop a body of law applicable thereto.

Through all the calculated shifts of Soviet tactics and mood, the Eisenhower-Nixon Administration has demonstrated its willingness to negotiate in earnest with the Soviet Union to arrive at just settlements for the reduction of world tensions. We pledge the new Administration to continue in the same course.

We are similarly ready to negotiate and to institute realistic methods and safeguards for disarmament, and for the suspension of nuclear tests. We advocate an early agreement by all nations to forego nuclear tests in the atmosphere, and the suspension of other tests as verification techniques permit. We support the President in any decision he may make to reevaluate the question of resumption of underground nuclear explosions testing, if the Geneva Conference fails to produce a satisfactory agreement. We have deep concern about the mounting nuclear arms race. This concern leads us to seek disarmament and nuclear agreements. And an equal concern to protect all peoples from nuclear danger, leads us to insist that such agreements have adequate safeguards.

We recognize that firm political and military policies, while imperative for our security, cannot in themselves build peace in the world.

In Latin America, Asia, Africa and the Middle East, peoples of ancient and recent independence have shown their determination to improve their standards of living, and to enjoy an equality with the rest of mankind in the enjoyment of the fruits of civilization. This determination has become a primary fact of their political life. We declare ourselves to be in sympathy with their aspirations.

We have already created unprecedented dimensions of diplomacy for these purposes. We recognize that upon our support of well-conceived programs of economic cooperation among nations rest the best hopes of hundreds of millions of friendly people for a decent future for themselves and their children. Our mutual security program of economic help and technical assistance; the Development Loan Fund, the Inter-American Bank, the International Development Association and the Food for Peace Program, which create the conditions for progress in less-developed countries; our leadership in international efforts to help children, eliminate pestilence and disease and aid refugees -- these are programs wise in concept and generous in purpose. We mean to continue in support of them.

Now we propose a further evolution of our programs for assistance to and cooperation with other nations, suitable to the emerging needs of the future.

We will encourage the countries of Latin America, Africa, the Middle East and Asia, to initiate appropriate regional groupings to work out plans for economic and educational development. We anticipate that the United Nations Special Fund would be of assistance in developing such plans. The United States would offer its cooperation in planning, and the provision of technical personnel for this purpose. Agreeable to the developing nations, we would join with them in inviting countries with advanced economies to share with us a proportionate part of the capital and technical aid required. We would emphasize the increasing use of private capital and government loans, rather than outright grants, as a means of fostering independence and mutual respect. The President's recent initiative of a joint partnership program for Latin America opens the way to this approach.

We would propose that such groupings adopt means to attain viable economies following such examples as the European Common Market. And if from these institutions, there should follow stronger economic and political unions, we would welcome them with our support.

Despite the counterdrive of international Communism, relentless against individual freedom and subversive of the sovereignty of nations, a powerful drive for freedom has swept the world since World War II and many heroic episodes in the Communist countries have demonstrated anew that freedom will not die.

The Republican Party reaffirms its determination to use every peaceful means to help the captive nations toward their independence, and thus their freedom to live and worship according to conscience. We do not condone the subjugation of the peoples of Hungary, Poland, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Albania, Bulgaria, Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia, and other once-free nations. We are not shaken in our hope and belief that once again they will rule themselves as nations.

Our time surges with change and challenge, peril and great opportunities. It calls us to great tasks and efforts -- for free men can hope to guard freedom only if they prove capable of historic acts of wisdom and courage.

Dwight David Eisenhower stands today throughout the world as the greatest champion of peace and justice and good.

The Republican Party brings to the days ahead trained, experienced, mature and courageous leadership.

Our Party was born for freedom's sake. It is still the Party of full freedom in our country. As in Lincoln's time, our Party and its leaders will meet the challenges and opportunities of our time and keep our country the best and enduring hope of freedom for the world.

National Defense

The future of freedom depends heavily upon America's military might and that of her allies. Under the Eisenhower-Nixon Administration, our military might has been forged into a power second to none. This strength, tailored to serve the needs of national policy, has deterred and must continue to deter aggression and encourage the growth of freedom in the world. This is the only sure way to a world at peace.

We have checked aggression. We ended the war in Korea. We have joined with free nations in creating strong defenses. Swift technological change and the warning signs of Soviet aggressiveness make clear that intensified and courageous efforts are necessary, for the new problems of the 1960's will of course demand new efforts on the part of our entire nation. The Republican Party is pledged to making certain that our arms, and our will to use them, remain superior to all threats. We have, and will continue to have, the defenses we need to protect our freedom.

The strategic imperatives of our national defense policy are these:

- A second-strike capability, that is, a nuclear retaliatory power that can survive surprise attack, strike back, and destroy any possible enemy.
- Highly mobile and versatile forces, including forces deployed, to deter or check local aggressions and "brush fire wars" which might bring on all-out nuclear war.
- National determination to employ all necessary military capabilities so as to render any level of aggression unprofitable. Deterrence of war since Korea, specifically, has been the result of our firm statement that we will never again permit a potential aggressor to set the ground rules for his aggression; that we will respond to aggression with the full means and weapons best suited to the situation.

Maintenance of these imperatives requires these actions:

- Unremitting modernization of our retaliatory forces, continued development of the manned bomber well into the missile age, with necessary numbers of these bombers protected through dispersal and airborne alert.
- Development and production of new strategic weapons, such as the Polaris submarine and ballistic missile. Never again will they be neglected, as intercontinental missile development was neglected between the end of World War II and 1953.
- Accelerate as necessary, development of hardening, mobility, dispersal, and production programs for long-range missiles and the speedy perfection of new and advanced generations of missiles and anti-missile missiles.

- Intensified development of active civil defense to enable our people to protect themselves against the deadly hazards of atomic attack, particularly fallout; and to develop a new program to build a reserve of storable food, adequate to the needs of the population after an atomic attack.
- Constant intelligence operations regarding Communist military preparations, to prevent another Pearl Harbor.
- A military establishment organized in accord with a national strategy which enables the unified commands in Europe, the Pacific, and this continent to continue to respond promptly to any kind of aggression.
- Strengthening of the military might of the free-world nations in such ways as to encourage them to assume increasing responsibility for regional security.
- Continuation of the "long pull" preparedness policies which, as inaugurated under the Eisenhower-Nixon Administration, have avoided the perilous peaks and slumps of defense spending and planning which marked earlier administrations.

There is no price ceiling on America's security. The United States can and must provide whatever is necessary to insure its own security and that of the free world and to provide any necessary increased expenditures to meet new situations, to guarantee the opportunity to fulfill the hopes of men of good will everywhere. To provide more would be wasteful. To provide less would be catastrophic. Our defense posture must remain steadfast, confident, and superior to all potential foes.

Economic Growth and Business

To provide the means to a better life for individual Americans and to strengthen the forces of freedom in the world, we count on the proved productivity of our free economy.

Despite the lamentations of the opposition in viewing the economic scene today, the plain fact is that our 500 billion dollar economy finds more Americans at work, earning more, spending more, saving more, investing more, building more than ever before in history. The well-being of our people, by virtually every yardstick, has greatly advanced under this Republican Administration.

But we can and must do better. We must raise employment to even higher levels and utilize even more fully our expanding, overall capacity to produce. We must quicken the pace of our economic growth to prove the power of American free enterprise to meet growing and urgent demands: to sustain our military posture, to provide jobs for a growing labor force in a time of rapid technological change, to improve living standards, to serve all the needs of an expanding population.

We therefore accord high priority to vigorous economic growth and recognize that its mainspring lies in the private sector of the economy. We must continue to foster a healthy climate in that sector. We reject the concept of artificial growth forced by massive new federal spending and loose money policies. The only effective way to accelerate economic growth is to increase the traditional strengths of our free economy -- initiative and investment, productivity and efficiency. To that end we favor:

- Broadly-based tax reform to foster job-making and growth-making investment for modernization and expansion, including realistic incentive depreciation schedules.
- Use of the full powers of government to prevent the scourges of depression and inflation.
- Elimination of featherbedding practices by labor and business.
- Maintenance of a stable dollar as an indispensable means to progress.
- Relating wage and other payments in production to productivity -- except when necessary to correct inequities -- in order to help stay competitive at home and abroad.
- Spurring the economy by advancing the successful Eisenhower-Nixon program fostering new and small business; by continued active enforcement of the anti-trust laws; by protecting consumers and investors against the hazard and economic waste of fraudulent and criminal practices in the market place; and by keeping the federal government from unjustly competing with private enterprise upon which Americans mainly depend for their livelihood.
- Continued improvement of our vital transportation network, carrying forward rapidly the vast Eisenhower-Nixon national highway program and promoting safe, efficient, competitive and integrated transport by air, road, rail and water under equitable, impartial and minimal regulation directed to those ends.
- Carrying forward, under the Trade Agreements Act, the policy of gradual, selective -- and truly reciprocal -- reduction of unjustifiable barriers to trade among free nations. We advocate effective administration of the Act's escape clause and peril point provisions to safeguard American jobs and domestic industries against serious injury. In support of our national trade policy we should continue the Eisenhower-Nixon program of using this government's negotiating powers to open markets abroad and to eliminate remaining discrimination against our goods. We should also encourage the development of fair labor standards in exporting countries in the interest of fair competition in international trade. We should, too, expand the Administration's export drive, encourage tourists to come from abroad, and protect U.S. investors against arbitrary confiscations and expropriations by foreign governments. Through these and other constructive policies, we will better our international balance of payments.
- Discharge by government of responsibility for those activities which the private sector cannot do or cannot so well do, such as constructive federal-local action to aid areas of chronic high unemployment, a sensible farm policy, development and wise use of natural resources, suitable support of education and research, and equality of job opportunity for all Americans.

Action on these fronts, designed to release the strongest productive force in human affairs -- the spirit of individual enterprise -- can contribute greatly to our goal of a steady, strongly growing economy.

Labor

America's growth cannot be compartmentalized. Labor and management cannot prosper without each other. They cannot ignore their mutual public obligation.

Industrial harmony, expressing these mutual interests, can best be achieved in a climate of free collective bargaining, with minimal government intervention except by mediation and conciliation.

Even in dealing with emergency situations imperiling the national safety, ways of solution must be found to enhance and not impede the processes of free collective bargaining -- carefully considered ways that are in keeping with the policies of national labor relations legislation and with the need to strengthen the hand of the President in dealing with such emergencies.

In the same spirit, Republican leadership will continue to encourage discussions, away from the bargaining table, between labor and management to consider the mutual interest of all Americans in maintaining industrial peace.

Republican policy firmly supports the right of employers and unions freely to enter into agreements providing for the union shop and other forms of union security as authorized by the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947 (the Taft-Hartley Act).

Republican-sponsored legislation has supported the right of union members to full participation in the affairs of their union and their right to freedom from racketeering and gangster interference whether by labor or management in labor-management relations.

Republican action has given to millions of American working men and women new or expanded protection and benefits, such as:

Increased federal minimum wage;

Extended coverage of unemployment insurance and the payment of additional temporary benefits provided in 1958-59;

Improvement of veterans' re-employment rights;

Extension of federal workman's compensation coverage and increase of benefits;

Legislative assurance of safety standards for longshore and harbor workers and for the transportation of migratory workers;

An increase of railroad workers' retirement and disability benefits.

Seven past years of accomplishment, however, are but a base to build upon in fostering, promoting and improving the welfare of America's working men and women, both organized and unorganized. We pledge, therefore, action on these constructive lines:

- Diligent administration of the amended Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 (Taft-Hartley Act) and the Labor Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 (Landrum-Griffin Act) with recommendations for improvements which experience shows are needed to make them more effective or remove any inequities.

- Correction of defects in the Welfare and Pension Plans Disclosure Act to protect employees' and beneficiaries' interests.
- Upward revision in amount and extended coverage of the minimum wage to several million more workers.
- Strengthening the unemployment insurance system and extension of its benefits.
- Improvement of the eight-hour laws relating to hours and overtime compensation on federal and federally assisted construction, and continued vigorous enforcement and improvement of minimum wage laws for federal supply and construction contracts.
- Continued improvement of manpower skills and training to meet a new era of challenges, including action programs to aid older workers, women, youth, and the physically handicapped.
- Encouragement of training programs by labor, industry and government to aid in finding new jobs for persons dislocated by automation or other economic changes.
- Improvement of job opportunities and working conditions of migratory farm workers.
- Assurance of equal pay for equal work regardless of sex; encouragement of programs to insure on-the-job safety, and encouragement of the states to improve their labor standards legislation, and to improve veterans' employment rights and benefits.
- Encouragement abroad of free democratic institutions, higher living standards and higher wages through such agencies as the International Labor Organization, and cooperation with the free trade union movement in strengthening free labor throughout the world.

Agriculture

Americans are the best-fed and the best-clothed people in the world. Our challenge fortunately is one of dealing with abundance, not overcoming shortage. The fullness of our fields, forests and grazing lands is an important advantage in our struggle against worldwide tyranny and our crusade against poverty. Our farmers have provided us with a powerful weapon in the ideological and economic struggle in which we are now engaged.

Yet, far too many of our farm families, the source of this strength, have not received a fair return for their labors. For too long, Democratic-controlled Congresses have stalemated progress by clinging to obsolete programs conceived for different times and different problems.

Promises of specific levels of price support or a single type of program for all agriculture are cruel deceptions based upon the pessimistic pretense that only with rigid controls can farm families be aided. The Republican Party will provide within the framework of individual freedom a greater bargaining power to assure an equitable return for the work and capital supplied by farmers.

The Republican Party pledges itself to develop new programs to improve and stabilize farm family income. It recognizes two main challenges; the immediate one of utilizing income-depressing surpluses, and the long-range one of steady balanced growth and development with a minimum of federal interference and control.

To utilize immediately surpluses in an orderly manner, with a minimum impact on domestic and foreign markets, we pledge:

- Intensification of the Food for Peace program, including new cooperative efforts among food-surplus nations to assist the hungry peoples in less favored areas of the world.
- Payment in kind, out of existing surpluses, as part of our land retirement program.
- Creation of a Strategic Food Reserve properly dispersed in forms which can be preserved for long periods against the contingency of grave national emergency.
- Strengthened efforts to distribute surpluses to schools and low-income and needy citizens of our own country.
- A reorganization of Commodity Credit Corporation's inventory management operations to reduce competition with the marketings of farmers.

To assure steady balanced growth and agricultural progress, we pledge:

- A crash research program to develop industrial and other uses of farm products.
- Use of price supports at levels best fitted to specific commodities, in order to widen markets, ease production controls, and help achieve increased farm family income.
- Acceleration of production adjustments, including a large scale land conservation reserve program on voluntary and equitable rental basis, with full consideration of the impact on local communities.
- Continued progress in the wise use and conservation of water and soil resources.
- Use of marketing agreements and orders, and other marketing devices, when approved by producers, to assist in the orderly marketing of crops, thus enabling farmers to strengthen their bargaining power.
- Stepped up research to reduce production costs and to cut distribution costs.
- Strengthening of the educational programs of the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Land-Grant institutions.
- Improvement of credit facilities for financing the capital needs of modern farming.
- Encouragement of farmer owned and operated cooperatives including rural electric and telephone facilities.
- Expansion of the Rural Development Program to help low-income farm families not only through better farming methods, but also through opportunities for vocational training, more effective employment services, and creation of job opportunities through encouragement of local industrialization.
- Continuation and further improvement of the Great Plains Program.
- Legislative action for programs now scheduled to expire for the school milk program, wool, and sugar, including increased sugar acreage to domestic areas.
- Free movement in interstate commerce of agricultural commodities meeting federal health standards.
- To prevent dumping of agricultural imports upon domestic markets.

To assure the American farmer a more direct voice in his own destiny, we pledge:

- To select an official committee of farmers and ranchers, on a regional basis, broadly representative of American agriculture, whose function will be to recommend to the President guidelines for improving the operation of government farm programs.

Natural Resources

A strong and growing economy requires vigorous and persistent attention to wise conservation and sound development of all our resources. Teamwork between federal, state and private entities is essential and should be continued. It has resulted in sustained conservation and resource development programs on a scale unmatched in our history.

The past seven years of Republican leadership have seen the development of more power capacity, flood control, irrigation, fish and wildlife projects, recreational facilities, and associated multi-purpose benefits than during any previous administration in history. The proof is visible in the forests and waters of the land and in Republican initiation of and support for the Upper Watershed Program and the Small Reclamation Projects Act. It is clear, also, in the results of continuing administration-encouraged forest management practices which have brought, for the first time, a favorable balance between the growth and cutting of America's trees.

Our objective is for further growth, greater strength, and increased utilization in each great area of resource use and development. We pledge:

- Use of the community watershed as the basic natural unit through which water resource, soil, and forest management programs may best be developed, with interstate compacts encouraged to handle regional aspects without federal domination.
- Development of new water resource projects throughout the nation.
- Support of the historic policy of Congress in preserving the integrity of the several states to govern water rights.
- Continued federal support for Republican-initiated research and demonstration projects which will supply fresh water from salt and brackish water sources.
- Necessary measures for preservation of our domestic fisheries.

● Continued forestry conservation with appropriate sustained yield harvesting, thus increasing jobs for people and increasing revenue.

● To observe the "preference clause" in marketing federal power.

● Support of the basic principles of reclamation.

● Recognition of urban and industrial demands by making available to states and local governments, federal lands not needed for national programs.

Full use and preservation of our great outdoors are pledged in:

● Completion of the "Mission 66" for the improvement of National Park areas as well as sponsorship of a new "Mission 66" program to encourage establishment and rehabilitation of local, state, and regional parks to provide adequate recreational facilities for our expanding population.

● Establishment of a citizens board of conservation, resource and land management experts to inventory those federal lands now set aside for a particular purpose; to study the future needs of the Nation for parks, seashores, wildlife and other recreational areas; and to study the possibility of restoring lands not needed for a federal program.

Minerals, metals, fuels, also call for carefully considered actions in view of repeated failure of Democratic-controlled Congresses to enact any long-range minerals legislation. Republicans, therefore, pledge:

● Long-range minerals and fuels planning and programming, including increased coal research.

● Assistance to mining industries in bridging the gap between peak defense demands and anticipated peacetime demands.

● Continued support for federal financial assistance and incentives under our tax laws to encourage exploration for domestic sources of minerals and metals, with reasonable depletion allowances.

To preserve our fish and wildlife heritage, we pledge:

● Legislation to authorize exchange of lands between state and federal governments to adapt programs to changing uses and habits.

● Vigorous implementation of long-range fish and wildlife programs.

Government Finance

To build a better America with broad national purposes such as high employment, vigorous and steady economic growth, and a dependable currency, responsible management of our federal finances is essential. Even more important, a sound economy is vital to national security. While leading Democrats charge us with a "budget balancing" mentality, their taunts really reflect their frustration over the people's recognition that as a nation we must live within our means. Government that is careless with the money of its citizens is careless with their future.

Because we are concerned about the well-being of people, we are concerned about protecting the value of their money. To this end, we Republicans believe that:

● Every government expenditure must be tested by its contribution to the general welfare, not to any narrow interest group.

● Except in times of war or economic adversity, expenditures should be covered by revenues.

● We must work persistently to reduce, not to increase, the national debt, which imposes a heavy economic burden on every citizen.

● Our tax structure should be improved to provide greater incentives to economic progress, to make it fair and equitable, and to maintain and deserve public acceptance.

● We must resist assaults upon the independence of the Federal Reserve System; we must strengthen, not weaken, the ability of the Federal Reserve System and the Treasury Department to exercise effective control over money and credit in order better to combat both deflation and inflation that retard economic growth and shrink people's savings and earnings.

● In order of priority federal revenues should be used: first, to meet the needs of national security; second, to fulfill the legitimate and urgent needs of the nation that cannot be met by the states, local governments or private action; third, to pay down on the national debt in good times; finally, to improve our tax structure.

National security and other essential needs will continue to make enormous demands upon public revenues. It is therefore imperative that we weigh carefully each demand for a new federal expenditure. The Federal Government should undertake not the most things nor the least things, but the right things.

Achieving this vital purpose demands:

● That Congress, in acting on new spending bills, have figures before it showing the cumulative effect of its actions on the total budget.

● That spending commitments for future years be clearly listed in each budget, so that the effect of built-in expenditure programs may be recognized and evaluated.

● That the President be empowered to veto individual items in authorization and appropriation bills.

● That increasing efforts be made to extend businesslike methods to government operations, particularly in purchasing and supply activities and in personnel.

Government Administration

The challenges of our time test the very organization of democracy. They put on trial the capacity of free government to act quickly, wisely, resolutely. To meet these challenges:

● The President must continue to be able to reorganize and streamline executive operations to keep the executive branch capable of responding effectively to rapidly changing conditions in both foreign and domestic fields. The Eisenhower-Nixon Administration did so by creating a new Department of Health, Education and Welfare, by establishing the National Aeronautics and Space Agency and Federal Aviation Agency, and by reorganizations of the Defense Department.

● Two top positions should be established to assist the President in, (1) the entire field of National Security and International Affairs, and, (2) Governmental Planning and Management, particularly in domestic affairs.

● We must undertake further reorganization of the Defense Department to achieve the most effective unification of defense planning and command.

● Improved conflict of interest laws should be enacted for vigilant protection of the public interest and to remove deterrents to Governmental service by our most able citizens.

● The Federal Government must constantly strengthen its career service and must be truly progressive as an employer. Government employment must be a vocation deserving of high public respect. Common sense demands continued improvements in employment, training and promotion practices based on merit, effective procedures for dealing with employment grievances, and salaries which are comparable to those offered by private employers.

● As already practiced by the Republican membership, responsible Policy Committees should be elected by each party in each house of Congress. This would provide a mechanism for meetings of party Congressional leaders with the President when circumstances demand.

● Needed federal judgeships, appointed on the basis of the highest qualifications, and without limitation to a single political party, should be created to expedite administration of justice in federal courts.

● The remarkable growth of the Post Office since 1952 to serve an additional 9 million urban and 1½ million farm families must be continued. The Post Office must be continually improved and placed on a self-sustaining basis. Progressive Republican policies of the past seven years have resulted in reduced costs, decentralization of postal operations, liberal pay, fringe benefits, improved working conditions, streamlined management, and improved service.

Vigorous state and local governments are a vital part of our federal union. The Federal Government should leave to state and local governments those programs and problems which they can best handle and tax sources adequate to finance them. We must continue to improve liaison between federal, state and local governments. We believe that the Federal Government, when appropriate, should render significant assistance in dealing with our urgent problems of urban growth and change. No vast new bureaucracy is needed to achieve this objective.

We favor a change in the electoral college system to give every voter a fair voice in Presidential elections.

We condemn bigotry, smear and other unfair tactics in political campaigns. We favor realistic and effective safeguards against diverting non-political funds to partisan political purposes.

Republicans will continue to work for Congressional representation and self-government for the District of Columbia and also support the constitutional amendment granting suffrage in national elections.

We support the right of the Puerto Rican people to achieve statehood, whenever they freely so determine. We support the right of the people of the Virgin Islands to an elected Governor, national representation and suffrage, looking toward eventual statehood, when qualified. We also support the right of the people of Guam to an elected Governor and national representation. These pledges are meaningful from the Republican leadership under which Alaska and Hawaii have newly entered the Union.

Congress should submit a constitutional amendment providing equal rights for women.

Education

The rapid pace of international developments serves to re-emphasize dramatically the challenge which generations of Americans will face in the years ahead. We are reminded daily of the crucial importance of strengthening our system of education to prepare our youth for understanding and shaping the powerful emerging forces of the modern world and to permit the fullest possible development of individual capacities and potentialities.

We express our gratefulness and we praise the countless thousands of teachers who have devoted themselves in an inspired way towards the development of our greatest heritage -- our own children -- the youth of the country.

Education is not a luxury, nor a gift to be bestowed upon ourselves and our children. Education is an investment; our schools cannot become second best. Each person possesses the right to education -- it is his birthright in a free Republic.

Primary responsibility for education must remain with the local community and state. The Federal Government should assist selectively in strengthening education without interfering with full local control of schools. One objective of such federal assistance should be to help equalize educational opportunities. Under the Eisenhower-Nixon Administration, the Federal Government will spend more than a billion dollars in 1960 to strengthen American education.

We commend the objective of the Republican Administration in sponsoring the National Defense Education Act to stimulate improvement of study and teaching in selected fields at the local level.

Toward the goal of fullest possible educational opportunity for every American, we pledge these actions:

- Federal support to the primary and secondary schools by a program of federal aid for school construction -- pacing it to the real needs of individual school districts in states and territories, and requiring state approval and participation.
- Stimulation of actions designed to update and strengthen vocational education for both youth and adults.
- Support of efforts to make adequate library facilities available to all our citizens.
- Continued support of programs to strengthen basic research in education; to discover the best methods for helping handicapped, retarded, and gifted children to realize their highest potential.

The Federal Government can also play a part in stimulating higher education. Constructive action would include:

- The federal program to assist in construction of college housing.
- Extension of the federal student loan program and graduate fellowship program.
- Consideration of means through tax laws to help offset tuition costs.
- Continued support of the East-West Center for cultural and technical interchange in Hawaii for the purpose of strengthening our relationship with the peoples of the Pacific world.
- Federal matching grants to help states finance the cost of state surveys and inventories of the status and needs of their school systems.

Provision should be made for continuous attention to education at all levels by the creation of a permanent, top-level commission to advise the President and the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, constantly striving to focus the interest of each citizen on the quality of our education at every level, from primary through post-graduate, and for every age group from children to adults.

We are aware of the fact that there is a temporary shortage of classrooms for our elemenary and secondary schools in a limited number of states. But this shortage, due to the vigilant action of state legislatures and local school boards, is not increasing, but is decreasing.

We shall use our full efforts in all the states of the Union to have these legislatures and school boards augment their present efforts to the end that this temporary shortage may be eliminated and that every child in this country shall have the opportunity to obtain a good education. The respective states as a permanent program can shoulder this long-standing and cherished responsibility easier than can the Federal Government with its heavy indebtedness.

We believe moreover that any large plan of federal aid to education, such as direct contributions to or grants for teachers salaries can only lead ultimately to federal domination and control of our schools to which we are unalterably opposed.

In the words of President Eisenhower -- "Education best fulfills its high purpose when responsibility for education is kept close to the people it serves -- when it is rooted in the homes, nurtured in the community and sustained by a rich variety of public, private and individual resources. The bond linking home and school and community -- the responsiveness of each to the needs of the others -- is a precious asset of American education."

Science and Technology

Much of America's future depends upon the inquisitive mind, freely searching nature for ways to conquer disease, poverty and grinding physical demands, as well as the science of space and the atom.

We Republicans express our profound gratitude to the great scientists and engineers of our country, both in and out of government, for the remarkable progress they have made. Reliable evidence indicates, all areas of scientific knowledge considered, that our country has been, is, and, under our system of free inquiry, will continue to be the greatest arsenal and reservoir of effective scientific knowledge in the world.

We pledge our continued leadership in every field of science and technology, earthbound as well as spatial, to assure a citadel of liberty from which the fruits of freedom may be carried to all people.

Our continuing and great national need is for basic research -- a wellspring of knowledge and progress. Government must continue to take a responsible role in science to assure that worthwhile endeavors of national significance are not retarded by practical limitations of private and local support. This demands from all Americans the intellectual leadership and understanding so necessary for these creative endeavors and an equal understanding by our scientists and technicians of the needs and hopes of mankind.

We believe the federal roles in research to be in the area of (1) basic research which industry cannot be reasonably expected to pursue, and (2) applied research in fields of prime national concern such as national defense, exploration and use of space, public health, and better common use of all natural resources, both human and physical. We endorse the contracting by government agencies for research and urge allowance for reasonable charges for overhead and management in connection therewith.

The vigor of American science and technology may best be inspired by:

- An environment of freedom and public understanding in which intellectual achievement and scientific research may flourish.
- A decentralization of research into as many centers of creativity as possible.
- The encouragement of colleges and universities, private enterprise, and foundations as a growing source of new ideas and new applications.
- Opportunity for scientists and engineers, in and out of government, to pursue their search with utmost aggressiveness.
- Continuation of the advisory committee to represent the views of the scientific community to the President and of the Federal Council for Science and Technology to foster coordination in planning and execution.
- Continued expansion of the Eisenhower-Nixon Atoms-for-Peace program and a constant striving, backed by scientific advice, for international agreement for peaceful and cooperative exploration and use of space.

Human Needs

The ultimate objective of our free society and of an ever growing economy is to enable the individual to pursue a life of dignity and to develop his own capacities to his maximum potential.

Government's primary role is to help provide the environment within which the individual can seek his own goals. In some areas this requires federal action to supplement individual, local and state initiative. The Republican Party has acted and will act decisively, compassionately, and with deep human understanding in approaching such problems as those of the aged, the infirm, the mentally ill, and the needy.

This is demonstrated by the significant increase in social security coverage and benefits as a result of recommendations made by the Eisenhower-Nixon Administration. As a result of these recommendations and normal growth, 14 million persons are receiving benefits today compared to five million in 1952, and benefit payments total $10.3 billion as compared to $2.5 billion in 1952. In addition there have been increases in payments to those on public assistance, both for their basic needs and for their health and medical care; and a broad expansion in our federal-state program for restoring disabled persons to useful lives -- an expansion which has accomplished the rehabilitation of over half a million persons during this Administration.

New needs, however, are constantly arising in our highly complex, interdependent, and urbanized society.

OLDER CITIZENS

To meet the needs of the aging, we pledge:

- Expansion of coverage, and liberalization of selected social security benefits on a basis which would maintain the fiscal integrity of the system.
- Support of federal-state grant programs to improve health, welfare and rehabilitation services for the handicapped older persons and to improve standards of nursing home care and care and treatment facilities for the chronically and mentally ill.
- Federal leadership to encourage policies that will make retirement at a fixed age voluntary and not compulsory.
- Support of programs that will persuade and encourage the nation to utilize fully the skills, wisdom and experience of older citizens.
- Prompt consideration of recommendations by the White House Conference on Aging called by the President for January 1961.

HEALTH AID

Development of a health program that will provide the aged needing it, on a sound fiscal basis and through a contributory system, protection against burdensome costs of health care. Such a program should:

- Provide the beneficiaries with the option of purchasing private health insurance -- a vital distinction between our approach and Democratic proposals in that it would encourage commercial carriers and voluntary insurance organizations to continue their efforts to develop sound coverage plans for the senior population.
- Protect the personal relationship of patient and physician.
- Include state participation.

For the needs which individuals of all age groups cannot meet by themselves, we propose:

- Removing the arbitrary 50-year age requirement under the disability insurance program while amending the law also to provide incentives for rehabilitated persons to return to useful work.
- A single, federal assistance grant to each state for aid to needy persons rather than dividing such grants into specific categories.
- A strengthened federal-state program to rehabilitate the estimated 200,000 persons who annually could become independent after proper medical services and occupational training.
- A new federal-state program, for handicapped persons completely dependent on others, to help them meet their needs for personal care.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

The Federal Government can and should help state and local communities combat juvenile delinquency by inaugurating a grant program for research, demonstration, and training projects and by placing greater emphasis on strengthening family life in all welfare programs for which it shares responsibility.

VETERANS

We believe that military service in the defense of our Republic against aggressors who have sought to destroy the freedom and dignity of man imposes upon the nation a special responsibility to those who have served. To meet this responsibility, we pledge:

- Continuance of the Veterans Administration as an independent agency.
- The highest possible standard of medical care with increasing emphasis on rehabilitation.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

As recently as 1953, thirty percent of Indian school age children were unable to obtain an education. Through Republican efforts, this fall, for the first time in history, every eligible Indian child will be able to attend an elementary school. Having accomplished this, we will now accelerate our efforts to open up both secondary and higher education opportunities for every qualified Indian youth.

As a result of a stepped-up health program there has been a marked decrease in death rates from tuberculosis and in the infant mortality rate. Also substantial progress has been made in the modernization of health facilities. We pledge continued progress in this area.

We are opposed to precipitous termination of the federal Indian trusteeship responsibility, and pledge not to support any termination plan for any tribe which has not approved such action.

HOUSING

Despite noteworthy accomplishments, stubborn and deep-seated problems stand in the way of achieving the national objective of a decent home in a suitable environment for every American. Recognizing that the Federal Government must help provide the economic climate and incentives which make this objective obtainable, the Republican Party will vigorously support the following steps, all designed to supplement and not supplant private initiative:

- Continued effort to clear slums, and promote rebuilding, rehabilitation, and conservation of our cities.
- New programs to stimulate development of specialized types of housing, such as those for the elderly and for nursing homes.
- A program of research and demonstration aimed at finding ways to reduce housing costs, including support of efforts to modernize and improve local building codes.
- Adequate authority for the federal housing agencies to assist the flow of mortgage credit into private housing, with emphasis on homes for middle- and lower-income families and including assistance in urban residential areas.
- A stepped-up program to assist in urban planning, designed to assure far-sighted and wise use of land and to coordinate mass transportation and other vital facilities in our metropolitan areas.

HEALTH

There has been a five-fold increase in government-assisted medical research during the last six years. We pledge:

- Continued federal support for a sound research program aimed at both the prevention and cure of diseases, and intensified efforts to secure prompt and effective application of the results of research. This will include emphasis on mental illness.
- Support of international health research programs.

We face serious personnel shortages in the health and medical fields. We pledge:

- Federal help in new programs to build schools of medicine, dentistry, public health and nursing and financial aid to students in those fields.

We are confronted with major problems in the field of environmental health. We pledge:

- Strengthened federal enforcement powers in combatting water pollution and additional resources for research and demonstration projects. Federal grants for the construction of waste disposal plants should be made only when they make an identifiable contribution to clearing up polluted streams.
- Federal authority to identify, after appropriate hearings, air pollution problems and to recommend proposed solutions.
- Additional resources for research and training in the field of radiological medicine.

PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS

In safeguarding the health of the nation the Eisenhower-Nixon Administration's initiative has resulted in doubling the resources of the Food and Drug Administration and in giving it new legal weapons. More progress has been made during this period in protecting consumers against harmful food, drugs, and cosmetics than in any other time in our history. We will continue to give strong support to this consumer-protection program.

Civil Rights

This nation was created to give expression, validity and purpose to our spiritual heritage -- the supreme worth of the individual. In such a nation -- a nation dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal -- racial discrimination has no place. It can hardly be reconciled with a Constitution that guarantees equal protection under law to all persons. In a deeper sense, too, it is immoral and unjust. As to those matters within reach of political action and leadership, we pledge ourselves unreservedly to its eradication.

Equality under law promises more than the equal right to vote and transcends mere relief from discrimination by government. It becomes a reality only when all persons have equal opportunity without distinction of race, religion, color or national origin, to acquire the essentials of life -- housing, education and employment. The Republican Party -- the party of Abraham Lincoln -- from its very beginning has striven to make this promise a reality. It is today, as it was then, unequivocally dedicated to making the greatest amount of progress toward that objective.

We recognize that discrimination is not a problem localized in one area of the country, but rather a problem that must be faced by North and South alike. Nor is discrimination confined to the discrimination against Negroes. Discrimination in many, if not all, areas of the country on the basis of creed or national origin is equally insidious. Further we recognize that in many communities in which a century of custom and tradition must be overcome heartening and commendable progress has been made.

The Republican Party is proud of the civil rights record of the Eisenhower Administration. More progress has been made during the past eight years than in the preceding 80 years. We acted promptly to end discrimination in our nation's capital. Vigorous executive action was taken to complete swiftly the desegregation of the armed forces, veterans' hospitals, navy yards, and other federal establishments.

We supported the position of the Negro school children before the Supreme Court. We believe the Supreme Court school decision was right and should be carried out in accordance with the mandate of the Court.

Although the Democratic-controlled Congress watered them down, the Administration's recommendations resulted in significant and effective civil rights legislation in both 1957 and 1960 -- the first civil rights statutes to be passed in more than 80 years.

Hundreds of Negroes have already been registered to vote as a result of Department of Justice action, some in counties where Negroes did not vote before. The new law will soon make it possible for thousands and thousands of Negroes previously disenfranchised to vote.

By executive order, a committee for the elimination of discrimination in government employment has been reestablished with broadened authority. Today, nearly one-fourth of all federal employees are Negro.

The President's Committee on Government Contracts, under the chairmanship of Vice President Nixon, has become an impressive force for the elimination of discriminatory employment practices of private companies that do business with the government.

Other important achievements include initial steps toward the elimination of segregation in federally aided housing; the establishment of the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice, which enforces federal civil rights laws; and the appointment of the bi-partisan Civil Rights Commission, which has prepared a significant report that lays the groundwork for further legislative action and progress.

The Republican record is a record of progress -- not merely promises. Nevertheless, we recognize that much remains to be done.

Each of the following pledges is practical and within realistic reach of accomplishment. They are serious -- not cynical -- pledges made to result in maximum progress.

1. Voting. We pledge:

- Continued vigorous enforcement of the civil rights laws to guarantee the right to vote to all citizens in all areas of the country.
- Legislation to provide that the completion of six primary grades in a state accredited school is conclusive evidence of literacy for voting purposes.

2. Public Schools. We pledge:

- The Department of Justice will continue its vigorous support of court orders for school desegregation. Desegregation suits now pending involve at least 39 school districts. Those suits and others already concluded will affect most major cities in which school segregation is being practiced.
- It will use the new authority provided by the Civil Rights Act of 1960 to prevent obstruction of court orders.
- We will propose legislation to authorize the Attorney General to bring actions for school desegregation in the name of the United States in appropriate cases, as when economic coercion or threat of physical harm is used to deter persons from going to court to establish their rights.
- Our continuing support of the President's proposal, to extend federal aid and technical assistance to schools which in good faith attempt to desegregate.

We oppose the pretense of fixing a target date 3 years from now for the mere submission of plans for school desegregation. Slow-moving school districts would construe it as a three-year moratorium during which progress would cease, postponing until 1963 the legal process to enforce compliance. We believe that each of the pending court actions should proceed as the Supreme Court has directed and that in no district should there be any such delay.

3. Employment. We pledge:

- Continued support for legislation to establish a Commission on Equal Job Opportunity to make permanent and to expand with legislative backing the excellent work being performed by the President's Committee on Government Contracts.
- Appropriate legislation to end the discriminatory membership practices of some labor union locals, unless such practices are eradicated promptly by the labor unions themselves.
- Use of the full-scale review of existing state laws, and of prior proposals for federal legislation, to eliminate discrimination in employment, now being conducted by the Civil Rights Commission, for guidance in our objective of developing a Federal-State program in the employment area.
- Special consideration of training programs aimed at developing the skills of those now working in marginal agricultural employment so that they can obtain employment in industry, notably in the new industries moving into the South.

4. Housing. We pledge:

- Action to prohibit discrimination in housing constructed with the aid of federal subsidies.

5. Public Facilities and Services. We pledge:

- Removal of any vestige of discrimination in the operation of federal facilities or procedures which may at any time be found.
- Opposition to the use of federal funds for the construction of segregated community facilities.
- Action to ensure that public transportation and other government authorized services shall be free from segregation.

6. Legislative Procedure. We pledge:

- Our best efforts to change present Rule 22 of the Senate and other appropriate Congressional procedures that often make unattainable proper legislative implementation of constitutional guarantees.

We reaffirm the constitutional right to peaceable assembly to protest discrimination in private business establishments. We applaud the action of the businessmen who have abandoned discriminatory practices in retail establishments, and we urge others to follow their example.

Finally we recognize that civil rights is a responsibility not only of states and localities; it is a national problem and a national responsibility. The Federal Government should take the initiative in promoting inter-group conferences among those who, in their communities, are earnestly seeking solutions of the complex problems of desegregation -- to the end that closed channels of communication may be opened, tensions eased, and a cooperative solution of local problems may be sought.

In summary, we pledge the full use of the power, resources and leadership of the Federal Government to eliminate discrimination based on race, color, religion or national origin and to encourage understanding and good will among all races and creeds.

Immigration

Immigration has historically been a great factor in the growth of the United States, not only in numbers but in the enrichment of ideas that immigrants have brought with them. This Republican Administration has given refuge to more than 32,000 victims of Communist tyranny from Hungary, ended needless delay in processing applications for naturalization, and has urged other enlightened legislation to liberalize existing restrictions.

Immigration has been reduced to the point where it does not provide the stimulus to growth that it should, nor are we fulfilling our obligation as a haven for the oppressed. Republican conscience and Republican policy require that:

- The annual number of immigrants we accept be at least doubled.
- Obsolete immigration laws be amended by abandoning the outdated 1920 census data as a base and substituting the 1960 census.
- The guidelines of our immigration policy be based upon judgment of the individual merit of each applicant for admission and citizenship.

Conclusion

We have set forth the program of the Republican Party for the government of the United States. We have written a Party document, as is our duty, but we have tried to refrain from writing a merely partisan document. We have no wish to exaggerate differences between ourselves and the Democratic Party; nor can we, in conscience, obscure the differences that do exist. We believe that the Republican program is based upon a sounder understanding of the action and scope of government. There are many things a free government cannot do for its people as well as they can do them for themselves. There are some things no government should promise or attempt to do. The functions of government are so great as to bear no needless enlargement. We limit our proposals and our pledges to those areas for which the government of a great republic can reasonably be made responsible. To the best of our ability we have avoided advocating measures that would go against the grain of a free people.

The history and composition of the Republican Party make it the natural instrument for eradicating the injustice and discrimination in this country. We Republicans are fortunate in being able to contend against these evils, without having to contend against each other for the principle.

We believe that we see, so far as men can see through the obscurity of time and trouble, the prudent course for the nation in its hour of trial. The Soviet Union has created another of the new situations of peril which has been the Communist record from the beginning and will continue to be until our strategy for victory has succeeded. The speed of technological change makes it imperative that we measure the new situations by their special requirements and accelerate as appropriate our efforts in every direction, economic and military and political, to deal with them.

As rapidly as we perfect the new generations of weapons we must arm ourselves effectively and without delay. In this respect the nation stands now at one of the new points of departure. We must never allow our technology, particularly in nuclear and propulsion fields, to lag for any reason until such time as we have dependable and honest safeguards of inspection and control. We must take steps at once to secure our position in this regard and at the same time we must intensify our efforts to develop better safeguards in the field of disarmament.

The free nations of the world must ever be rallied to the cause and be encouraged to join together in more effective alliances and unions strong enough to meet all challenges and sustain the common effort. It is urgent that we innovate to keep the initiative for our free cause.

We offer toil and sweat, to ward off blood and tears. We advocate an immovable resistance against every Communist aggression. We argue for a military might commensurate with our universal tasks. We end by declaring our faith in the Republic and in its people, and in the deathless principles of right from which it draws its moral force.

EISENHOWER SPEECH

"Certainly, these are the results of sound, deliberate policies -- including executive veto of irresponsible, narrowly-conceived pork-barrel legislation," the President said.

He said there was more to be done in improving education, solving farm problems, restoring depressed regions and combatting juvenile delinquency, discrimination and slums, but "it is Republican policy in such matters to rely first on the ingenuity and initiative of citizens themselves". The "central Government finds itself deeply involved," he said, but assistance must be given "in ways that will protect the traditional relationship between federal and local government" and promote the total economy. The President said it was "irresponsible misrepresentation" for any party to allege that the Nation's human and economic problems could be solved quickly or by "reckless spending" and "without increasing taxes or incurring new deficits".

Defense -- Disputing the "cult of professional pessimists" who "continually mouth the allegation that America has become a second-rate military power", the President said that "in the sum of our capabilities" the U.S. had "become the strongest military power on earth."

He said his Administration was spending more than three times as much annually for peacetime defense as did the Truman Administration during the 12 months before the outbreak of the Korean War, and the U.S. heavy bomber fleet had been doubled and modernized with powerful B-52 intercontinental jet planes. The U.S. continental defense, "almost non-existent" when the Eisenhower Administration took office in 1953, had been "virtually completed" against manned aircraft and "we are pressing forward" with "vast" missile defense programs.

The Truman Administration's total expenditure in the field of long-range ballistic missiles was "less than $7 million" and the present Administration "had to start practically from scratch" in the missile field, the President said; space satellites "were ignored during the previous Administration". Since 1953, however, the U.S. had "developed a whole family of intermediate and intercontinental ballistic missiles", had "authorized" 50 new guided-missile ships, had "provided for approximately the same number of nuclear-powered vessels" including two revolutionary Polaris submarines operational this year and "we now lead the world" in scientific space exploration.

Foreign Relations -- The President said he had journeyed more than 90,000 miles and visited more than a score of nations during the past year "in the pursuit of world peace". By conducting foreign relations "with patience and on firm principle" the U.S. had made progress in "solidifying cooperation among our allies", and had given the uncommitted nations a "clearer understanding of our purposes".

South Korea, South Vietnam and Taiwan remained independent, and "the American family of nations is more closely knit than ever before." The Inter-American Development Bank and the Development Loan Fund had been created and the lending capacity of the Export-Import Bank had been increased by $2 billion.

The President said the "tactical unpredictability and shiftiness of Soviet leaders" calls for "constant analysis and reappraisal", and he announced he was planning an "early conference with Congressional leaders of both parties" to discuss recent crises which the Soviets had been "devising". He said he would "make such recommendations for any changes in our own national program as may then seem appropriate".

On the question of national prestige, the President challenged the "Soviet dictator" to hold free elections under United Nations sponsorship "to permit people everywhere -- in every nation and on every continent" to vote on the issue: "Do you want to live under a Communist regime or under a free system such as found in the United States?" He said the U.S. would gladly measure its world prestige by the results of such a vote.

Summary of 1960 Presidential Campaign, Issues

The 1960 Presidential campaign began, for all practical purposes, with the nomination July 13 of Sen. John F. Kennedy as the Democratic standard-bearer. By election day Nov. 8, Kennedy had covered 75,000 miles and visited 46 states, while his Republican rival, Vice President Richard M. Nixon, had traveled more than 60,000 miles and appeared in all 50 states. Speaking as often as a dozen times a day, both candidates were seen and heard by millions of voters in person as well as on radio and television, in what may have been the most talkative as well as expensive campaign on record. Highlights of that campaign were as follows.

August Session. Kennedy and his running mate, Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (Texas), were destined to fail completely in their efforts to complete action on major Democratic legislative planks during the postconvention session of Congress that began Aug. 8. The Senate approved the Kennedy minimum wage bill, but the measure died when House conferees refused to budge from their own truncated version. Medical care for the aged under the Social Security system -- a second "must" bill -- was rejected by the Senate, while a school construction bill expired when the House Rules Committee refused to send it to conference. As Congress adjourned Sept. 1 and the campaign began in earnest, Republicans made the most of their opponents' plight.

The Issues. The central issue, Kennedy asserted time and again, was the need for strong Presidential leadership to reverse the nation's declining prestige abroad and lagging economy at home. Arguing that the position of the United States relative to that of the Soviets had deteriorated under the Eisenhower Administration, he called for a stepped-up defense effort and an enlarged federal role in a wide variety of fields at home and abroad "to get America moving again."

Vice President Nixon, whose nomination July 27 was unopposed, defended the Eisenhower record vigorously, but described it as "something to build on". Picturing himself as a man who could "stand up to Khrushchev" and had been trained for the Presidency, he described Kennedy as "immature" and "impulsive", citing his off-the-cuff remark that the President might have expressed regret to Khrushchev over the U-2 affair. Nixon also stressed the foreign policy experience of his running mate, Ambassador to the UN Henry Cabot Lodge, promising to place him in charge of all cold war activities. On domestic affairs, Nixon emphasized his commitment to "fiscal responsibility" and charged that Democratic platform pledges would add $18 billion to the budget.

Televised Debates. In an unprecedented series of face-to-face encounters, candidates Kennedy and Nixon appeared on four nationally-televised, hour-long programs -- Sept. 26, Oct. 7, 13, and 21 -- during which they were questioned by panels of newsmen and permitted to rebut each other's answers. (The time was provided free-of-charge by the networks, when Congress suspended the "equal time" provision of the Communications Act for the duration of the 1960 campaign.) The audiences for the four debates were estimated by the Arbitron rating service at 70 to 75 million, 61 million, 65 million, and 64 million, respectively.

Republicans were generally dismayed by Nixon's appearance on the first debate, blaming it on poor lighting and their candidate's unaggressive stance, but they found little fault with the remaining three programs. Democrats regarded all of the debates as highly successful on grounds that they served to demolish the GOP theme of Kennedy's "immaturity" and to project his personality to millions of undecided voters, many of whom were disturbed by his Catholic faith. (For details of the "religious" issue, see next page.)

Quemoy-Matsu, Cuba. Two ticklish foreign policy problems emerged as campaign issues, both on Kennedy's initiative. In response to a question on the Oct. 7 debate, Kennedy criticized the ambiguity of the nation's commitment to defend the Chinese offshore islands of Quemoy and Matsu, saying it was "unwise to take the chance of being dragged into a war which may lead to a world war over two islands which are not strategically defensible," and that "our line should be drawn in the sea" between Formosa and the mainland. Nixon disagreed, saying "these two islands are in the area of freedom (and) we should not force our Nationalist allies to get off of them and give them to the Communists." The issue blossomed, as Kennedy called Nixon "trigger-happy" while Nixon said Kennedy was advocating a course of "surrender." Later, however, both men toned down their dispute, saying they supported the position of President Eisenhower.

Kennedy himself raised the Cuban issue, charging that the Communists had gained a foothold "90 miles off the coast of Florida" partly because of Administration failure to deal properly with the Batista regime before its overthrow by Fidel Castro. Nixon defended the Administration's record and charged that Kennedy had implied he would violate the principle of non-intervention in dealing with the Castro regime.

President's Role. President Eisenhower made his first campaign appearance in behalf of the Nixon-Lodge ticket Oct. 28 at a Philadelphia rally. He spent Nov. 2 touring the New York area with both candidates, speaking on television that night. On Nov. 4 the President spoke in Cleveland and later in Pittsburgh, in a televised address. His final effort was a televised speech in Washington, D.C., on Nov. 7, in which he was joined by Nixon, who earlier had appeared on a four-hour question-and-answer telethon broadcast from Detroit. In each of his speeches, the President gave his unqualified support to the GOP candidates and urged their election. His efforts, on which GOP leaders had counted heavily, were accorded strong praise by party stalwarts.

March of Events. Unlike the 1956 campaign, when the Suez crisis persuaded many voters to stick with the Administration, the 1960 campaign apparently was uninfluenced by any last-minute foreign policy developments. But Kennedy found considerable support for his argument that America's prestige had declined, as the result of two unrelated events: Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's stormy appearance at the UN General Assembly meeting in New York, during which the neutralist Afro-Asian block demonstrated its increasing size and influence; and the disclosure that polls taken abroad by the U.S. Information Agency had confirmed the alleged decline in America's prestige. Kennedy's case was also buttressed by the fact that unemployment increased by 200,000 in October, a month when it usually drops by 200,000. Although not released officially until Nov. 11, the figures were disclosed just before the election.

RELIGIOUS ISSUE PLAYS MAJOR ROLE IN CAMPAIGN

The Roman Catholic religious faith of Democratic candidate John F. Kennedy played a major role in the 1960 Presidential campaign. Widespread anti-Catholic agitation by Protestant groups which feared the election of a Roman Catholic to the Presidency was answered by other Protestant groups and leaders in both political parties who denounced the introduction of a "religious issue" into the campaign.

A companion issue -- whether or not there was a Catholic "bloc vote" which would support a Roman Catholic Presidential candidate -- was discussed by both Kennedy and his opponents. (See p. 809)

Kennedy himself took a clear stand on the question of how his Catholicism might influence him as President. In major addresses April 21 before the American Society of Newspaper Editors (see p. 809-12) and Sept. 12 before the Greater Houston (Texas) Ministerial Assn. (see box, below) he emphasized his belief in separation of church and state and his intention, if elected President, to base all his decisions solely on the interests of the United States.

Vice President Richard M. Nixon, the Republican Presidential nominee, April 23 said he did not believe "a so-called religious issue" was worthy of discussion in the 1960 campaign.

Kennedy's Vice Presidential running mate, Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), Aug. 4 attacked the introduction of religious considerations into voting. "Americans would do well to remember that all the denominations in this country are outnumbered 18 to 1 in the world.... The way to size up a man is to look him in the eye and I have looked in Jack Kennedy's eyes. No human being in the world is going to dictate his decisions. He is going to do what is best for America."

Henry Cabot Lodge, the Republican Presidential candidate, Sept. 12 said, "I certainly do not want anyone to vote for me for that reason (opposition to Kennedy's Catholicism). I refuse to admit that my three Roman Catholic grandsons are debarred from the Presidency on that ground or, for that matter, my two Episcopalian grandsons."

Initial Discussion

Public debate concerning qualifications of a Catholic for the Presidency began in earnest during the weeks preceding the May 10 West Virginia Presidential primary in which Kennedy was opposed by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.). Reports from West Virginia during the campaign indicated that anti-Catholic sentiment in a state with a very low Catholic population percentage was harming Kennedy (although Humphrey himself denounced an anti-Catholic movement in strong terms). Church groups and prominent politicians began to comment publicly on the religious issue.

The convention of the American Council of Christian Churches April 28 unanimously passed a resolution disapproving a Catholic as President. The resolution said, in part, "The present accusation of bigotry by Kennedy supporters and others we believe is an effort to silence those who are raising pertinent questions relative to our historic American heritage of separation of church and state. Therefore, the American Council of Christian Churches goes on record as being opposed to a Roman Catholic for President."

The National Assn. of Evangelicals April 29 adopted a resolution expressing doubt that a Catholic President "could or would resist fully the pressures of the ecclesiastical hierarchy.... The real source of unrest in respect to church-state separation is the total lack of any convincing commitment of the Roman Catholic Church to the principle of church-state separation...."

The Quadrennial Methodist General Conference April 30 rejected a resolution which would have put it on record as "uneasy" about a Catholic running for the Presidency. The conference is the top policy-making body of the church, representing over 9 million Methodists.

The general assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church May 2 rejected a resolution which would have officially opposed the election of a Roman Catholic as President. Instead, it adopted one encouraging Presbyterians to "determine the basic issues in any campaign, (which are) more important than (a candidate's) denominational or party affiliations."

The American Lutheran Magazine April 19 called for an official declaration by the Roman Catholic Church that "its traditional position of union or collaboration of church and state" did not apply to the United States.

President Eisenhower, asked at his April 27 press conference how he felt on religion as a campaign issue, read two sections of the Constitution stating that there shall be no religious test for office and that Congress should make no laws respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting its free practice.

Republican National Chairman Thruston B. Morton April 22 said he thought Kennedy was hurting his chances for the Democratic nomination by speeches like the one he made April 21 before the American Society of Newspaper Editors. "They were impressed with his speech...but by the next day, they were a little suspicious that he was actually using this as an offensive tool himself, rather than a defensive cloak," Morton said.

AFL-CIO President George Meany, a Catholic, wrote in the May issue of the AFL-CIO's American Federationist, "There is no place in the labor movement for 'balanced tickets' or rotation of office based upon religion, race or national origin. We do not select men as leaders, or deny them leadership, by any such false standards."

When Kennedy won the West Virginia primary with over 60 percent of the vote, most observers said his victory proved that his Roman Catholicism would not bar him from winning the Democratic Presidential nomination or the election. Kennedy May 11 said the religious issue in American politics "was buried here in the soil of West Virginia."

Catholic Views

The May 17 edition of the newspaper of the Vatican, "L'Osservatore Romano" said the Roman Catholic hierarchy had "the right and the duty to intervene" in political fields in order to guide its members. The paper said that the problem might arise whether to collaborate with "those who do not admit religious principles" and that the decision as to whether such collaboration is morally licit must be decided by ecclesiastical authority, never the individual.

The Vatican paper said a Catholic "must in every sector of his life draw the inspiration of his conduct, both private and public, from the laws, orientations and instructions of the hierarchy.... It is absurd to split the conscience into one part which is that of the believer and one which is that of the citizen, as if the Catholic religion were just one part of the life of the spirit and not a central idea which orients a man's whole existence."

John C. Hayes, dean of Loyola University Law School, May 22 said Catholics have a duty to both their church and the duly constituted government: "One allegiance does not precede the other in the sense that values conflict and force us to choose one or the other.... Our religious doctrine authorizes -- and indeed requires -- that all Catholics cooperate with our fellow citizens of all other faiths in civic, social and political action, whenever to do so promotes the temporal common good and whenever not to do so would impair the common good."

The Most Rev. Patrick O'Boyle, Catholic Archbishop of Washington, May 12 said, "in the months to come, as attacks upon the Catholic church in the United States become more frequent and violent" Catholics should remember that the truth of their faith was more important than material power. He said, "It is not important to the church that the symbols of secular power accrue to its sons."

The Southern Baptist Convention May 20 adopted a resolution apparently opposing Catholics for public office. The resolution said, in part, "When a public official is inescapably bound by the dogma and demands of his church, he cannot consistently separate himself from these. This is especially true when that church maintains a position in open conflict with our established and constituted American pattern of life, specifically...separation of church and state, the freedom of the conscience in matters related to marriage and the family.... In all cases, a public official should be free from sectarian pressures that he may make independent decisions consistent with the rights and privileges of all citizens."

The Baptist Bible Fellowship May 24 adopted a resolution opposing the election of a Catholic as President.

A group of New York City Negro political leaders, including Rep. Adam C. Powell Jr. (D N.Y.), July 7 said there should be a Catholic on both Democratic and Republican Presidential tickets. Powell, who was at first opposed to Kennedy because of differences on civil rights legislation, later endorsed him. He said Oct. 18, "Every one of the Southern Baptist clergymen who opposed Kennedy do so solely because of his religion, and these men have come out against integration. This group hates Catholics and hates Negroes."

Kennedy Nomination

Nominated for President July 13 by the Democratic National Convention, Kennedy became the second Catholic in U.S. history to receive a major party nomination. The first was New York Gov. Alfred E. Smith, nominated by the Democratic party in 1928.

In his July 15 acceptance speech, Kennedy said he was fully aware "that the Democratic party, by nominating someone of my faith, has taken on what many regard as a new and hazardous risk -- new, at least, since 1928." Kennedy expressed confidence that the American people would believe in his intention to uphold the Constitution and his oath of office.

Herbert G. Klein, press secretary to Nixon, Aug. 22 said Nixon had placed a ban on his workers discussing the religious issue in the campaign. Quotes from the Nixon memo:

"1. No person or organization conditioning their support on religious grounds will be recognized in this campaign.

"2. There shall be no discussion of the religious issue in any literature by any volunteer group or party organization supporting the Vice President, and no literature of this kind from any source should be made available at campaign headquarters or otherwise distributed.

"3. Staff and volunteer workers should avoid discussing the 'religious issue' either informally or casually since this might be construed as some kind of deliberate campaign."

American evangelist Billy Graham Aug. 19 said religion would be a decisive factor in the U.S. Presidential election. Graham said the election "poses certain problems for Protestants because the Roman Catholic church is not only a religious institution but also a secular institution with its own ministers and ambassadors.... A man's religion cannot be divorced from his person and Kennedy has faced up to this."

In answer to a question at his Aug. 24 news conference, President Eisenhower said he would be "naive" to think some people would not make religion an issue but, as far as he was concerned, it was not a proper one.

In his first speech of the 1960 Presidential campaign former President Harry S. Truman Sept. 5 created a rumpus by accusing Nixon of allowing appeals to bigots as a part of his campaign. "While (Nixon) stands at the front door proclaiming charity and tolerance, his supporters are herding the forces of racial, religious and anti-union bigotry in by way of the back door. And no one will every make me believe he is not smart enough to know what is going on," Truman said.

Kennedy Aug. 25 announced appointment of James W. Wine as head of a "community relations" division of the Democratic National Committee, charged with counteracting criticism of Kennedy's Catholicism. Wine resigned his post as associate general secretary for interpretation of the National Council of Churches to take the post on the Kennedy campaign staff.

Protestant Group Statement

On Sept. 7 a "temporary" organization called the National Conference of Citizens for Religious Freedom; consisting of 150 persons from 37 Protestant sects, met in Washington, D.C. The Rev. Dr. Norman Vincent Peale of New York City, pastor and author on religious and social matters, was a prominent member of the conference. The group issued a statement which said, in part:

"We of this conference, ministers and laymen in Protestant churches of 37 denominations, realize that the candidacy of a Roman Catholic for the President of the U.S. has aroused questions which must be faced frankly by the American people. We believe that this religious issue should be handled with the utmost discretion; that it should be discussed only in a spirit of truth, tolerance and fairness.... We believe in the same freedom of religion for Roman Catholics as for ourselves and all other people.

"The key question is whether it is in the best interest of our society for any church organization to attempt to exercise control over its members in political and civic affairs. While the current Roman Catholic contender for the Presidency states specifically that he would not be so

Kennedy Describes His Views on Religion and Government

Excerpts from Kennedy's Sept. 12 speech to the Greater Houston Ministerial Assn. in Houston, Texas:

"While the so-called religious issue is necessarily and properly the chief topic here tonight, I want to emphasize from the outset that we have far more critical issues to face in the 1960 election.... And they are not religious issues -- for war and hunger and ignorance and despair know no religious barriers.

"But because I am a Catholic, and no Catholic has ever been elected President, the real issues in this campaign have been obscured -- perhaps deliberately, in some quarters less responsible than this. So it is apparently necessary for me to state once again -- not what kind of church I believe in, for that should be important only to me -- but what kind of America I believe in.

"I believe in an America where the separation of church and state is absolute -- where no Catholic prelate would tell the President (should he be Catholic) how to act and no Protestant minister would tell his parishioners for whom to vote....

"I believe in an America that is officially neither Catholic, Protestant, nor Jewish....

"Finally I believe in an America where religious intolerance will someday end....

"(This) represents the kind of Presidency in which I believe -- a great office that must neither be humbled by making it the instrument of any one religious group nor tarnished by arbitrarily withholding its occupancy from the members of any one religious group....

"I want a Chief Executive whose public acts are responsible to all groups and obligated to none -- who can attend any ceremony, service or dinner his office may appropriately require of him -- and whose fulfillment of his Presidential oath is not limited or conditioned by any religious oath, ritual or obligation.

"I ask you...to judge me on the basis of my record of fourteen years in Congress -- on my declared stands against an ambassador to the Vatican, against unconstitutional aid to parochial schools and against any boycott of the public schools...instead of judging me on the basis of these pamphlets and publications we all have seen, that carefully select quotations out of context from the statements of Catholic church leaders, usually in other countries, frequently in other centuries, and always omitting, of course, the statement of the American Bishops in 1948 which strongly endorsed church-state separation, and which more nearly reflects the views of almost every American Catholic. I do not consider these other quotations binding upon my public acts -- why should you?

"Whatever issue may come before me as President -- on birth control, divorce, censorship, gambling or any other subject -- I will make my decision in accordance with these views, in accordance with what my conscience tells me to be in the national interest and without regard to outside religious pressures or dictates. And no power or threat of punishment could cause me to decide otherwise.

"But if the time should ever come -- and I do not concede any conflict to be even remotely possible -- when my office would require me to either violate my conscience or violate the national interest, then I would resign the office. And I hope any conscientious public servant would do the same."

influenced, his church insists that he is duty-bound to admit to its direction. This unresolved conflict leaves doubt in the minds of millions of our citizens.

"The Roman Catholic Church is a political as well as a religious organization.... It is inconceivable that a Roman Catholic President would not be under extreme pressure by the hierarchy of his church to accede to its politics with respect to foreign relations...."

"The Roman Catholic Church has specifically repudiated on many occasions the principle sacred to us that every man shall be free to allow the dictates of his conscience in religious matters...."

"The Roman Catholic Church in the United States has repeatedly attempted to break down the wall of separation of church and state by a continuous campaign to secure public funds for the support of its schools and other institutions...."

"Is it reasonable to assume that a Roman Catholic President would be able to withstand altogether the determined efforts of the hierarchy of his church to gain further funds and favors for its schools and institutions and otherwise breach the wall of separation of church and state?"

Reaction

Reaction to the statement was widespread, with Peale often the center of the attack.

Robert Kennedy, the candidate's brother and campaign manger Sept. 8 said the "close relationship" of Peale and Dr. Daniel A. Poling, a member of the conference, "with Mr. Nixon and the Republican party in the election leads me to question the sincerity of their statement and their judgment in issuing it."

Peale Sept. 7 was asked if the meeting had discussed the Quaker faith of Republican Presidential nominee Richard M. Nixon and said it had not, adding, "I don't know that he ever let it bother him."

Democratic National Chairman Henry M. Jackson Sept. 12 said Nixon had "no honorable alternative" except to say he rejected the support of Peale.

Nixon's press secretary Herbert G. Klein, speaking for the Vice President who was hospitalized, Sept. 8 refused to repudiate anyone but said Nixon "doesn't believe anyone should endorse him on the basis of the religious issue."

Kennedy Sept. 9 said he "would not attempt to respond to Dr. Peale or to anyone else who questions my loyalty to the U.S." He said it was difficult for him to respond to "and give any answer that would satisfy" those who "are not interested in my own expressed position but prefer to state it themselves."

The Liberal party of New York Sept. 8 said, "We believe that Dr. Peale and his associates, though they renounce bigotry, show blind prejudice because they see the Roman Catholic Church at all points in terms of the worst elements in its life and that they show no understanding of the developments within Roman Catholicism in many Democratic countries which are favorable to religious liberty to all. They do not understand the freedom of the American Catholic layman on civil matters...."

Peale Sept. 7 said Nixon did not know of the meeting and "probably would have disapproved of it had he known."

Peale Sept. 9 issued a personal statement saying in part: "After serious and may I say prayerful thought and with no repudiation of my personal conviction I have come to the conclusion that the public agitation of religion as an issue can only be devisive and therefore in the long run harmful to our country."

Peale Sept. 15 announced he had severed connections with the conference "immediately after the news report of that meeting appeared." His statement said "I did attend the study conference...and was asked to preside at one session. I believe that it is perfectly appropriate for a group of Protestants or any other group to meet to discuss and consider the possible impact of the election of a Catholic President upon religious liberties in the United States. However, I did not call this meeting and had nothing to do with setting it up. I was merely present as an invited guest.... I am strongly opposed to any admixture of religious discussion and political partisanship.... The unwarranted implications which have been drawn from my attendance at that meeting contradict my record of 30 years of ardent interfaith activity, of which I am justly proud.... The election should be on the basis of the man best qualified."

As an outgrowth of the Peale conference, the Citizens for Religious Freedom set up headquarters in Washington, D.C. The group would "encourage" similar meetings of Protestant ministers and laymen and promote discussion of the "religious issue".

Partisan Comments

Jackson Sept. 14 suggested that news media discover and expose the sources of anti-Catholic literature which he said was being widely distributed.

James W. Wine, in charge of handling the "religious issue" for the Kennedy campaign, Sept. 8 said he would establish committees to combat prejudice in at least 40 states. The Democratic National Committee also prepared a memorandum to answer the "questions which are frequently asked by fairminded people" using quotations from Kennedy's speeches and statements on church-state relations as well as on specific issues connected with the discussion of Catholicism such as birth control and federal aid to schools. The pamphlet was distributed to party workers and to those voters who wrote in with questions on the matter.

Virginia Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. (D) Aug. 31 said he had no doubt the Republican leadership was subtly using religious feeling for political purposes. "Furthermore, it seems that Mr. Nixon by ostensibly deprecating the matter is continually calling it to the attention of the people."

Democratic Vice Presidential candidate Lyndon B. Johnson Sept. 9 said he deplored the religious issue "and I think by election day most people will deplore it. I don't think the American people will condone a party or a candidate which permits it to be used."

Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) Sept. 8 said the Democrats were the ones who were injecting the issue. "They seem to think it will do them some good to keep talking about this religious issue. I assume their reasoning is that if they can create the impression that there are people voting for Mr. Nixon, just because he is not a Catholic, they can arouse the Catholics."

'Cut-off' Date

Nixon in a Sept. 11 "Meet the Press" interview suggested a cut-off date for all talk of the religious issue. Said Nixon:

"I have no doubt whatever about Sen. Kennedy's loyalty to his country and about the fact that if he were elected President that he would put the Constitution of the United States above any other consideration.... I don't believe, in other words, there is a religious issue as far as Senator Kennedy is concerned."

Kennedy Sept. 11 said, "I wish we could cut off debate on this subject right now. I think we'd all be better off. How could we possibly improve on the Constitution?" He made no move to set a date, however. Hodges Sept. 13 said "Nixon wants a cut-off on religious talk because he's afraid of a boomerang." Jackson Sept. 14 said Nixon's suggestion was unrealistic because "religion is an issue."

Kennedy Meets Ministers

Kennedy Sept. 12 spoke to the Greater Houston Ministerial Assn. and answered questions from the floor (for speech see box).

Kennedy said, in response to questions that he was "confident" there would be no attempt at improper interference on the part of his church if he were President and if there were, he would tell them their actions were improper. Kennedy was asked if he would ask to have his statement on the separation of church and state "officially authorized for all U.S. Catholics" by the Vatican; he replied: "...as I do not accept the right of, as I said, any ecclesiastical official to tell me what I shall do in the sphere of my public responsibility as an elected official, I do not propose to ask...the Vatican to take some action. I do not propose to interfere with their free right to do exactly what they want."

Nixon Sept. 13 said he accepted Kennedy's position on the religious issue and thought others should do the same. Nixon said he could not envisage a situation where he might have to consider resigning as President in a conflict of national interest and personal principle, as Kennedy had postulated in his speech. "As a matter of fact I do not anticipate the time would come for Sen. Kennedy to do likewise," he said.

Groups' Reactions

Protestants and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State Sept. 6 released a statement saying U.S. voters must decide "on the basis of all the evidence" whether the election of a Catholic "would promote or hinder the historic American principle of church-state separation."

A group of 100 leaders of Protestant, Jewish, Catholic and Greek Orthodox churches Sept. 11 said they opposed "all attempts to make religious affiliation the basis of the voter's choice of candidates for public office."

John C. Bennett, dean of Union Theological Seminary, said in an editorial in Christianity and Crisis that religious opposition to Kennedy was spread by "a kind of Protestant underground". He said the Peale group showed "no understanding of the inner dynamics of the Roman Catholic Church."

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said "the same scurrilous, filthy type of literature passed around against Negroes is now passed out against Catholics." He said he was not speaking in favor of any candidate but that Negroes "are sickened, I am sure, by the hateful spectacle now being unveiled" and claimed all Americans who love freedom "must repudiate bigotry with every weapon at hand."

Americans for Democratic Action Sept. 13 said, "those who have raised the religious issue against Sen. Kennedy object to him more because he is a liberal than because he is a Catholic." They called Peale "a long time leader of the extreme right-wing Committee on Constitutional Government (who is) using the religious issue as a smokescreen for his reactionary ends."

Charles P. Taft, chairman of the Fair Campaign Practices Committee, Sept. 17 said churches distributing anti-Catholic literature advocating political action were in jeopardy of losing tax exemption privileges. The Treasury Sept. 23 said this might be true but that each case would have to be considered individually.

A group of 165 Catholic laymen Oct. 5 issued a statement saying in part, "We believe constitutional separation of church and state offers the best guarantee both of religious freedom and civic peace." The statement was made because, they said, they felt an obligation to speak because of current controversy over Catholicism and the Presidential election.

Glenn L. Archer, executive director of Protestants and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State, Oct. 5 said he wished the statement's position "could be shared by the Roman Catholic clergy who actually manage the church's affairs." He said it "evades the real religious issue in this country today."

In mid-October reports began to circulate that certain Protestant groups would use Reformation Sunday (Oct. 30) as an occasion to launch an intensive drive to prevent Kennedy's election. Reports of sermons on that day indicated the question of Kennedy's Catholicism was largely ignored, though there were a sprinkling of either anti-Catholic or anti-bigotry sermons in some areas.

"Evil Propaganda"

In Detroit Oct. 17 President Eisenhower criticized as "evil propaganda" an insert in the official magazine of the United Automobile Workers (AFL-CIO). The insert showed on the left the Statue of Liberty and on the right a hooded Ku Klux Klan figure with torch and club, with the caption below: "Which do you choose: Liberty or Bigotry?" and concluded inside with an appeal for Kennedy's election. The Michigan Fair Election Practices Commission condemned the UAW leaflet and said it raised the religious issue with a "reverse twist." AUW president Walter P. Reuther Oct. 17 said he regretted the insert had been misinterpreted.

Republican National Chairman Thruston B. Morton Oct. 24 charged that the official Kennedy-Johnson Labor Committee had issued a pamphlet with the title "Don't let the GOP-lins get you!" with a Ku Klux Klan figure directly below.

Vice Presidential nominee Johnson Oct. 20 called on Nixon to disavow the support of anti-Catholic groups. "I am concerned about the type of campaign that is being waged for President," Johnson said. "But it's not so much different from the campaign Mr. Nixon has waged in the past. They are always campaigns of fear, campaigns of hate, that try to divide our country when it should be united."

Rep. William E. Miller (R N.Y.), chairman of the Republican Congressional Committee and a Roman Catholic himself, Oct. 20 charged Kennedy was deliberately inflaming the religious issue to win Catholic votes. Miller complained about rebroadcasts in Northern cities of Kennedy's speech on the religious question in Houston, Texas, Sept. 12.

Robert F. Kennedy, brother of the nominee and his campaign manager, Oct. 23 charged some Republican organizations were responsible for the distribution of anti-Catholic literature. He cited San Diego, Calif., and unspecified Florida and Pennsylvania organizations. Democratic National Chairman Henry M. Jackson Oct. 24 denounced a Missouri Republican pamphlet he said made it "cynically clear" that the Nixon campaign was "based on religious prejudice."

Klein, with Nixon's authorization, Oct. 24 denied the Kennedy charges and said, "The Vice President has tried in every way possible to eliminate the religious issue from the campaign.... If this type of smear continues, however, Richard Nixon may have no choice but to discuss the tactics of his opponents. By constantly making charges as the younger Kennedy made yesterday, and by continuing to run the film of the Senator's Houston ministerial appearance in states with heavy Catholic populations, one can only conclude that the Kennedy camp is attempting to exploit the religious issue to solidify what they regard as a Catholic vote."

Methodist Bishop John Wesley Lord Oct. 20 said he hoped American Catholic Bishops would back up what he described as Kennedy's "completely satisfactory" statement on the separation between church and state. "When the Roman Catholic Church will recognize without equivocation the basic rights of free individuals and disavow any political involvement in affairs of state, all embarrassment for the Roman Catholic candidate will vanish. We Protestants are waiting for this assurance."

In a Nov. 1 statement a group of 24 Unitarian and Universalist clergymen said, "The assertion that no Roman Catholic should be President of the U.S., irrespective of his record and views, is an affront to all true Americans and to the Constitution." On Nov. 3 a group of prominent Protestant scholars and church officials said it would injure Protestantism and the entire Nation if a Roman Catholic were denied the Presidency because of his faith. Among the signers were Episcopal Bishop James A. Pike of San Francisco; retired Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of Washington, D.C.; theologians Dr. Reinhold Neibuhr of Union Theological Seminary, New York, and Dr. Paul Tillich of Harvard Divinity School; and the Rev. Francis B. Sayre, dean of the Episcopal Cathedral, Washington, D.C.

Twenty Lutheran theology professors in six states Nov. 6 issued a statement supporting Kennedy's candidacy.

PUERTO RICAN BISHOPS

Three Roman Catholic Bishops of Puerto Rico, in a letter released Oct. 21, stated it was their "obligation to prohibit" Catholics from voting for the party of Gov. Luis Munoz Marin, in the Nov. 8 election. Munoz Marin and his party had been at odds with church leaders over such issues as birth control, sterilization and time off from schools for religious education. Bishop James E. McManus signed the pastoral letter with Archbishop James P. Davis and Bishop Luis Aponte Martinez.

Munoz Marin (a Catholic) Nov. 8 was reelected by an overwhelming majority.

CATHOLIC VOTE ISSUE IN 1960 ELECTION

The influence of the "Catholic vote" -- whether it decided the Wisconsin primary in favor of Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), whether it helped him win large pluralities in the Presidential election in the Northeastern urban areas with relatively large percentages of Catholic voters, and whether an "anti-Catholic vote" helped Nixon turn back Kennedy's challenge in border and farm states -- was an important question in 1960, both in the Democratic primaries and in the Nov. 8 election itself.

Kennedy April 21, in a speech before the American Society of Newspaper Editors, attacked the introduction of the religious issue into the campaign and said he doubted whether any Catholic vote as such existed. (For a discussion of the religious issue, as distinct from the "Catholic vote" issue, see story p. 804)

Said Kennedy: "Nor am I appealing, as is too often claimed, to a so-called Catholic vote. Even if such a vote exists -- which I doubt -- I want to make one thing clear again: I want no votes solely on account of my religion. Any voter, Catholic or otherwise, who feels another candidate would be a superior President should support that candidate. I do not want any vote cast for me for such illogical reasons."

In 1956 Kennedy and Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) were engaged in a race for the Democratic Vice Presidential nomination.

Before the convention Kennedy supporters, reportedly under the direction of Kennedy's principal policy adviser, Theodore C. Sorensen, prepared a memorandum which asserted that there was a "Catholic vote" and that it could assure the victory of the Democratic ticket with Adlai E. Stevenson for President if a Catholic were nominated for Vice President. The memorandum was prepared for and distributed by Connecticut state Democratic chairman John Bailey, a close adviser and supporter of Kennedy.

Shortly after circulation of the Bailey memorandum, another memorandum, doubting the effectiveness of the Catholic vote to swing the election, was prepared by supporters of Humphrey and distributed by political analyst Louis Bean.

Starting on page 810, this report reprints a summary of the memoranda on the Catholic vote question distributed by Kennedy and Humphrey supporters in 1956.

A Kennedy spokesman told CQ April 21 that the Bailey paper was not an attempt to win Kennedy the Vice Presidential nomination because of his Roman Catholicism, but rather an attempt to answer critics who said that Kennedy as the Vice Presidential candidate would harm the 1956 Democratic ticket because of his religion.

In 1959 Congressional Quarterly did an analysis of the effect of the "Catholic vote" on an election -- the 1958 Minnesota Senate contest, in which incumbent Sen. Edward J. Thye (R), a Lutheran, was defeated by Rep. Eugene J. McCarthy (D), a Catholic. Conclusions of that study: McCarthy's religion appeared to help him more than it hurt him; McCarthy won some Catholic votes that another Democratic candidate might have lost; conversely, but less certainly, McCarthy may have driven away a limited number of Lutheran votes which a non-Catholic might have captured; and although there is evidence of a religious influence in the voting, it is to be measured at most in the swing of 2 to 3 percentage points.

Kennedy Position

Following are some of Kennedy's comments on the "Catholic Vote" issue, made in the April 21 speech, and on his role as a Catholic:

First: Is the religious issue a legitimate issue in this campaign? There is only one legitimate question underlying all the rest: would you, as President of the United States, be responsive in any way to ecclesiastical pressures or obligations of any kind that might in any fashion influence or interfere with your conduct of that office in the national interest? I have answered that question many times. My answer was -- and is -- "NO".

Once that question is answered, there is no legitimate issue of my religion. But there are, I think, legitimate questions of public policy -- of concern to religious groups which no one should feel bigoted about raising, and to which I do not object to answering. But I do object to being the only candidate required to answer those questions.

Federal assistance to parochial schools, for example, is a very legitimate issue actually before the Congress. I am opposed to it. I believe it is clearly unconstitutional. I voted against it on the Senate floor this year, when offered by Senator Morse. But interestingly enough, I was the only announced candidate in the Senate who did so. (Nevertheless I have not yet charged my opponents with taking orders from Rome.)

An Ambassador to the Vatican could conceivably become a real issue again. I am opposed to it, and said so long ago. But even though it was last proposed by a Baptist President, I know of no other candidate who has been even asked about this matter.

The prospects of any President ever receiving for his signature a bill providing foreign aid funds for birth control are very remote indeed. It is hardly the major issue some have suggested. Nevertheless I have made it clear that I would neither veto nor sign such a bill on any basis except what I considered to be the public interest, without regard to my private religious views. I have said the same about bills dealing with censorship, divorce, our relations with Spain or any other subject.

Secondly: Can we justify analyzing voters as well as candidates strictly in terms of their religion? I think the voters of Wisconsin objected to being categorized simply as either Catholics or Protestants in analyzing their political choices. I think they objected to being accosted by reporters outside of political meetings and asked one question only -- their religion -- not their occupation or education or philosophy or income -- only their religion.

And I think they had a right to object. The flood of post-primary analyses on the so-called "Catholic vote" and "Protestant vote" -- carefully shaped to conform with their authors' pre-primary predictions -- would never be published in any competent statistical journal.

Only this week, I received a very careful analysis of the Wisconsin results. It conclusively shows two significant patterns of bloc voting: I ran strongest in those areas where the average temperature in January was 20 degrees or higher, and poorest in those areas where it was 14 degrees or lower -- and that I ran well in the beech tree and basswood counties and not so well among the hemlock and pine.

Anyone who thinks these trends are merely coincidences of no relevance has never tried to campaign in Wisconsin in January. In any event, this analysis is being rushed to West Virginia, where I am assured that the winter is less severe and the basswood are abundant. It has been suggested, however, that to offset my apparent political handicaps I may have to pick a running-mate from Maine or, preferably, Alaska.

The facts of the matter are that this analysis stands up statistically much better than all the so-called analyses of the religious vote. And so do analyses of each county based on their distance from the Minnesota border, the length of their Democratic tradition and their inclusion in my campaign itinerary. I carried some areas with large proportions of voters who are Catholics -- and I lost some. I carried some areas where Protestants predominate -- and I lost some.

It is true that I ran well in cities -- and large numbers of Catholics live in cities. But so do union members and older voters and veterans and chess fans and basswood lovers. To say my support in the cities is due only to the religion of the voters is incapable of proof and an unfair indictment of their political maturity.

Of those Catholics who voted for me, how many did so on grounds of my religion -- how many because they felt my opponent was too radical -- how many because they resented the attacks on my record -- how many because they were union members -- how many for some other reason? I do not know. And the facts are that no one knows.

For voters are more than Catholics, Protestants or Jews. They make up their minds for many diverse reasons, good and bad. To submit the candidates to a religious test is unfair enough -- to apply it to the voters themselves is divisive, degrading and wholly unwarranted.

Third and finally: Is there any justification for applying special religious tests to one office only: the Presidency? Little or no attention was paid to my religion when I took the oath as Senator in 1953 -- as a Congressman in 1947 -- or as a Naval officer in 1941. Members of my faith abound in public office at every level except the White House. What is there about the Presidency that justifies this constant emphasis upon a candidate's religion and that of his supporters?

The Presidency is not, after all, the British Crown, serving a dual capacity in both church and state. The President is not elected to be protector of the faith -- or guardian of the public morals. His attendance at church on Sunday should be his business alone, not a showcase for the nation.

On the other hand, we are in no danger of a one-man Constitutional upheaval. The President, however intent he may be on subverting our institutions, cannot ignore the Congress -- or the voters -- or the courts. And our highest court, incidentally, has a long history of Catholic Justices, none of whom, as far as I know, was ever challenged on the fairness of his rulings on sensitive church-state issues.

Some may say we treat the Presidency differently because we have had only one previous Catholic candidate for President. But I am growing weary of that term. I am not the Catholic candidate for President. I do not speak for the Catholic Church on issues of public policy -- and no one in that Church speaks for me. My record on aid to education, aid to Tito, the Conant nomination and other issues has displeased some prominent Catholic clergymen and organizations; and it has been approved by others. The fact is that the Catholic Church is not a monolith -- it is committed in this country to the principles of individual liberty -- and it has no claim over my conduct as a public officer sworn to do the public interest.

So I hope we can see the beginning of the end of references to me as "the Catholic candidate" for President. Do not expect me to explain or defend every act or statement of every Pope or priest, in this country or some other, in this century or the last -- and that includes the Mayor of Dijon.

I have tried to examine with you today the press' responsibility in meeting this religious issue. The question remains: what is my responsibility? I am a candidate. The issue is here. Two alternatives have been suggested:

(1) The first suggestion is that I withdraw to avoid a "dangerous religious controversy"; and accept the Vice Presidential nomination in order to placate the so-called Catholic vote.

I find that suggestion highly distasteful. It assumes the worst about a country which prides itself on being more tolerant and better educated than it was in 1928. It assumes that Catholics are a pawn on the political chess-board, moved hither and yon, and somehow "bought off" by the party putting in the second-spot a Catholic whom the party barred from the top. And it forgets, finally, that such a performance would have an effect on our image abroad as well as our self-respect here at home....

(2) The alternative is to proceed with the primaries, the convention and the election. If there is bigotry in the country, then so be it -- there is bigotry. If that bigotry is too great to permit the fair consideration of a Catholic who has made clear his complete independence and his complete dedication to separation of church and state, then we ought to know it.

Kennedy-Humphrey 1956 Memoranda

The following is Congressional Quarterly's summary of the claims and counterclaims made in the 1956 memoranda by Kennedy and Humphrey supporters on the Catholic issue in the election. It must be noted that the figures and conclusions cited were not Congressional Quarterly's; they were those selected and prepared by persons interested in promoting the 1956 Vice Presidential candidacies of Kennedy and Humphrey.

The debate was divided into five major questions:

- Is there a Catholic vote?
- Where and how did Catholics vote in 1952, as compared to earlier years?
- Would a Catholic Vice Presidential candidate regain for the Democrats votes they lost in 1952?
- Would a Catholic cost the Democrats votes?
- How can the Democrats win the election?

Is There a Catholic Vote?

- KENNEDY SUPPORTERS -- "The voter surveys of Lazarsfeld and others (The People's Choice) demonstrated that the proportion of Catholics voting for Democrats or Republicans was more or less constant, regardless of whether the individual Catholic voter was poor or wealthy, rural or urban, Irish or Italian. They voted not as union members or farmers or women or old people, but as Catholics.... There is or can be a Catholic vote; and it is apparent that a well-known Catholic on the Democratic ticket would allocate to that ticket an extraordinarily large portion of that vote. It is important: Catholics constitute more than one out of every five eligible voters in the country...."

- HUMPHREY SUPPORTERS -- The pro-Kennedy memorandum "states boldly that in 1952 Catholics 'voted not as union members or farmers or women or old people, but as Catholics.' It seemingly cites a few books as authorities, but none of these books actually supports that proposition.... According to Campbell (The Voter Decides), voter behavior is influenced primarily by economic status.... The same conclusion has been reached, perhaps without the benefit of a scientific survey, by leading Catholic writers.... The same position has been taken by official Catholic publications.... The fact of the matter is that all authorities on voting behavior, including practical politicians, agree that to the extent to which there is bloc voting on the basis of the voter's origin, it is voting along ethnic, not religious lines. Voters of Irish descent indeed have some preference for a candidate of Irish descent. Voters of Italian descent may prefer a candidate of Italian descent. But this preference does not cut across ethnic lines. These facts of political life are well known to anyone who has ever worked on the job of getting out the vote. It is true, of course, that in the past most of the ethnic blocs which adhered to the Catholic religion voted Democratic, but the evidence shows that what held them to the Democratic party was not their faith but their status as poor, underprivileged city dwellers.... Catholics do not vote as Catholics."

Where, How Do Catholics Vote?

● KENNEDY SUPPORTERS -- "The Catholic vote is far more important than its numbers because of its concentration in the key states and cities of the North. These are the pivotal states with large electoral votes, which vary as to their party support and several of which are inevitably necessary for a victory."

The Kennedy supporters prepared this table of 14 "key states" with a total electoral vote of 261. (See also chart p. 813)

State	Proportion of Catholics in Adult Population	Electoral Votes
New York	32%	45
Pennsylvania	29	32
Illinois	30	27
New Jersey	39	16
Massachusetts	50	16
Connecticut	49	8
Rhode Island	60	4
California	22	32
Michigan	24	20
Minnesota	24	11
Ohio	20	25
Wisconsin	32	12
Maryland	21	9
Montana	22	4

(Editor's Note: Revised figures are cited by James MacGregor Burns in his book, John Kennedy: A Political Profile (Harcourt, Brace & Co., 1959-60). Burns cited the Bailey paper, which he found in Kennedy's main office files, and 1959 interviews with Kennedy supporters who furnished him with Catholic voter percentages updated from 1956: "The Kennedy camp estimates, based on voting turnout, that the proportion of two-party vote in these states (those listed above, less Rhode Island and Montana) made up of Catholic voters is 57 percent in Massachusetts, 55 percent in Connecticut, 47 percent in New Jersey, 40 percent in New York, and so on down a descending scale to the lowest, 25 percent in Ohio. These dozen states have a total of 253 votes, with 269 needed to win....")

"The strength of the Catholic vote within these states is considerably increased by the findings...that Catholics consistently turn out to vote in greater proportion than non-Catholics....

"These are the key Democratic states where elections are won or lost.... Equally important are the major urban areas in these states and the concentration of Catholic voters in those areas.... The Catholic voters in each of these cities can usually determine the size of the Democratic margin in those cities; the size of the Democratic margin in those cities usually determines whether these states go Democratic; and whether these states go Democratic usually determines whether the Democrats win the election....

"Are Catholics an important part of the Democratic party? Nationally, Catholics constituted about one-third of Truman's vote in 1948 and about 28 percent of Stevenson's in 1952; and their numbers are particularly significant in the Democratic parties of the states mentioned....

"Do Catholics normally vote Democratic? All polls confirm this statement, as they do the previous one.... Many Catholics, of course, are a part of that all-important independent vote, particularly in recent years....

"Are the Democrats losing the Catholics? Every analyst agrees they are. The Catholic Democratic vote was noticeably off in 1948 -- and showed a critical decline in 1952.... Gallup said only 34 percent of all Catholics considered themselves Republicans in 1950, but at least 44 percent voted for Eisenhower in 1952. Harris of the Roper organization said the following shifts were decisive in Eisenhower's election: Catholics in general, normally over 65 percent Democratic, went 47 percent for Ike....

"These shifters -- whom we shall call 'normally Democratic Catholics' -- constituted approximately 7 percent of Eisenhower total nationwide vote. Applying these figures to the Republican vote in the 14 key Catholic states, it becomes clear why the Democrats lost the election."

● HUMPHREY SUPPORTERS -- Did not directly dispute the pro-Kennedy memorandum's analysis of the location and distribution of Catholic votes, except to claim the Kennedy analysis "unjustifiably inflates the Catholic voting percentage in certain states. It does so by relying on Campbell's conclusion in 'The Voter Decides' that on a nationwide basis, Catholics turn out to vote in larger numbers than non-Catholics. But these national average figures are affected by the low turnout in the predominantly Protestant South.... In a state such as Connecticut, Catholics may turn out in smaller numbers than their population would indicate, as they have a larger number of non-citizens and as among recent immigrant groups women do not tend to vote."

The Humphrey supporters do dispute the conclusions drawn by the Kennedy supporters from their analysis of Catholic voting in 1952, as shown below in the section headed, How Can the Democrats win?

Can a Catholic Gain Democratic Votes?

● KENNEDY SUPPORTERS -- "The possibilities of mobilizing the Catholic vote for a Catholic candidate have already been discussed. But further striking evidence is shown by the election of 1952, when Catholic candidates for Congressman, Senator and Governor ran consistently ahead of their party.... Had Stevenson run as well as Kennedy, Pastore, Roberts, Lausche and Mansfield, he would, of course, have won an additional 49 electoral votes."

● HUMPHREY SUPPORTERS -- "If the Catholic Congressional candidates did, in fact, lead the ticket, was it because they are Catholics? (The pro-Kennedy) memorandum merely assumes that these Congressional candidates must have run ahead of the ticket because of their religion. It does not furnish proof.... Such a causal relationship would be indicated if Catholic Congressional candidates ran ahead of the ticket and non-Catholic candidates did not, or if Catholic candidates ran better in Catholic areas than in non-Catholic areas.

"But the statistical evidence presented here shows: that most Congressmen, whether Catholic or non-Catholic, run ahead of the national ticket; that Catholic candidates do not run better in Catholic areas than they do in non-Catholic areas; that non-Catholics run as well as Catholics in Catholic areas....

"There is no demonstrable difference in the voting drawing power of Catholic candidates over non-Catholics when compared to the 1952 Stevenson vote....

"Incumbent Congressmen, as a rule, run better than the national ticket. Their religious affiliation is clearly irrelevant....

"The irrelevance of a candidate's religion is best demonstrated by Senator Kennedy's experience in the 1952 election in Massachusetts. According to the latest available statistics, 50.5 percent of the population of Massachusetts is of the Catholic faith. However, Catholics are not distributed evenly throughout the state. They vary from a low of 27.2 percent in Barnstable County to a high of 56.1 percent in Bristol County. How did Kennedy, a Catholic, fare in the counties if compared to Stevenson?

"The evidence shows that Kennedy obtained his largest margin over Stevenson, 13.1 percentage points, in the county with the smallest percentage of Catholics, Barnstable County.... It is thus clear that whatever Kennedy's special attraction to the voters may have been, it was not his Catholicism, for he did not run particularly strong in Catholic areas."

Would a Catholic Lose Votes?

● KENNEDY SUPPORTERS -- "On March 11, 1955, in a Gallup Poll...nearly 7 out of 10 respondents said they would vote for a well-qualified Catholic nominated by their party for the Presidency itself, not the Vice Presidency. Of those who thought they would be opposed, a large share lived in the South -- and if one of three Democrats stayed home or voted Republican in the South due to a nominee's religious affiliation, few if any southern electoral votes would be lost, even though Democratic margins in several states might be diminished. A large share of the remainder were Republicans who would not support the Democratic ticket under any circumstances, elderly voters who do not constitute a sizable part of the electorate and usually vote Republican when they do, and northern 'liberals' who will certainly vote Democratic without regard to the Vice President's religion....

"How about Al Smith? The Al Smith myth is one of the falsest myths in politics.... 1928 was a Republican year, regardless of who was on either ticket.... Tammany and Prohibition were at issue far more than religion. The nation has changed since 1928. There are far more Catholics...and the nation is considerably more tolerant on religious matters.... Most important of all, and least known, is the fact that Al Smith helped the Democratic party far more than he hurt it.... Smith increased the Democratic vote by fantastic proportions in most states and particularly urban counties."

● HUMPHREY SUPPORTERS -- "It is true, as the memorandum points out, that with Al Smith at the head of the ticket, the Democratic party gained in Catholic areas. But these areas were city areas and the Democratic gains in 1928 covered all city groups, including the substantial Jewish populations. 1928 marks the establishment of an economically-based coalition which was strengthened by Franklin D. Roosevelt and continued thereafter. If the coalition is being weakened, the weakening is not a religious reflection but an economic one....

"Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas (128 electoral votes).... Here maximum resistance to...(Kennedy's) Catholicism would be encountered. These are the states that split off in 1928. Hard to see John (Kennedy) making an appeal to rural populists as an urban Boston Irish Catholic....

"West Virginia, Missouri, Oklahoma (29 electoral votes). No appeal by John in any of these states -- urban, Boston, Irish Catholic no help, and quite possible a deterrent to winning back Oklahoma."

How Can the Democrats Win?

● KENNEDY SUPPORTERS -- "Some will say, of course, that a Catholic Democratic Vice Presidential nominee could not recapture all of these Catholics who voted Republican in 1952, inasmuch as some of them had been solid Republicans for years. It is apparent, as discussed at the outset, that he could gain most of them. But assume he could get no more than those 'normally Democratic Catholics' who voted for Ike in 1952. He would still add 132 electoral votes to the Democratic column, enough when combined with the Solid South to provide a majority of electoral votes....

"If he brought into the Democratic fold only these normally Democratic Catholics who voted for Ike, he would probably swing New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Pennsylvania and Illinois -- for 132 electoral votes. If he also wins the votes of Catholics who shifted to the Republicans in 1948 or earlier, he could also swing New Jersey, Minnesota, Michigan, California, Wisconsin, Ohio, Maryland, Montana and maybe even New Hampshire -- for a total of 265 electoral votes (needed to win: 266). Thus Ike could and would be defeated....

"Has the Democratic era ended? Has the party permanently lost its political base among the Catholics and immigrants of the large northern cities that made a Democratic victory possible in 1940, 1944 and 1948? A Catholic Vice Presidential nominee could refashion this base as Al Smith did, and begin a new era of Democratic victories, without costing even the few electoral votes Smith did."

● HUMPHREY SUPPORTERS -- "It is sometimes urged that a Catholic, especially an Irish Catholic, be named Vice President to draw back into the fold some who have left in later years.... Survey Research Center studies show us that Catholic and Protestant voters left the party standard in 1952 in almost exactly the same proportions: one in five. The nomination of an Irish Catholic, it is suggested, would bring back the Catholics.

"Aside from what such a nomination would do to the Protestants...what could it promise Catholics? The Irish leadership has been challenged in almost every state in America....

"We assume there are undoubtedly middle-class Irish Catholic voters who did not return to the party in 1954 who might still be prepared to vote against Eisenhower and for Stevenson if John (Kennedy) is the Vice Presidential candidate. Not to assume there would be some such persons is to ignore the political facts of life. But we must ask ourselves the relation of John's candidacy to the party nationally in these ways:

"Will non-Irish, Catholic groups...swing against Ike because an Irish candidate is the Democratic Vice Presidential candidate?

"How will the candidacy of an Irish Catholic for Vice President affect the party in Protestant areas...a host of states of rural non- (or even anti-) Catholic orientation. For a non-urban, pro-farm Catholic, maybe; but for an urban, Boston intellectual who so duplicates rather than complements Governor Stevenson, the prospects seem doubtful."

Special Report

PERCENTAGE OF CATHOLICS IN THE 50 STATES AND D.C.

Roman Catholics constituted about 22.8 percent of the population of the U.S. at the beginning of 1960, according to Catholic Church membership figures released May 26 by the Official Catholic Directory (P.J. Kenedy & Sons, N.Y.). The chart below shows the number of Catholics in each state as of Jan. 1, 1960, according to the Directory and the total population of each state as of April 1, 1960, according to Census Bureau official figures released Nov. 15.

CQ Fact Sheet On Campaign Spending

49 GROUPS REPORT RECEIPTS OF $5.6 MILLION IN 1959

A total of $4,989,203.01 was spent by 49 political groups in 1959, $3,686,262 less than by 64 organizations in 1958, and $665,809 more than in 1955, the last off-year before a Presidential and Congressional election. The Republicans spent more than twice the amount expended by Democratic groups, compared with 1958 when Republicans spent four times the Democratic amount, and 1955 when the amount was again twice as much.

The 49 organizations received in contributions and other receipts $5,628,202.73. This was $3,139,192 less than in 1958 and $662,495 more than in 1955. The Democratic-Republican receipt proportions are equivalent to the expenditure comparisons.

The total 1960 campaign spending, judging from previous reports, will be considerably higher than the 1959 figures. Total federal campaign spending in 1952 was $23,064,367, and in 1956 it rose to $33,185,725.

The Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 requires political committees and organizations to file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives periodic reports on contributions received and expenditures made during each calendar year.

Following is a list of receipts and expenditures by political committees during the last three off-years and in 1958. (Miscellaneous figures included in total only.) (See 1956 Almanac p. 705; 1958 Almanac p. 747; 1959 Almanac p. 813-814).

Receipts

	Democratic	Republican	Labor	Total
1955	$1,108,681	$2,728,191	$ 783,066	$4,965,707
1957	986,586	2,332,854	446,168	4,167,462
1958	1,733,626	4,686,423	1,854,634	8,767,394
1959	1,412,666	2,933,092	681,475	5,628,202

Expenditures

1955	$1,013,983	$2,446,162	$ 531,109	$4,323,394
1957	1,067,734	2,879,875	243,293	4,661,413
1958	1,702,605	4,657,652	1,828,777	8,675,465
1959	1,339,537	2,841,614	265,923	4,989,203

Following is a list of the groups that reported to the Clerk of the House. The symbol (c) next to receipts indicates total contributions; (r) total receipts (including contributions and other receipts).

The dates given signify the dates which the report covered where they differ from the calendar year 1959.

Reporting Flaws Noted

A contribution to a political candidate or committee "is a public act committed for a public purpose," and as such should be subject to the fullest possible scrutiny, according to a February report of the Citizens' Research Foundation of Princeton, (Money, Politics and Public Reporting, by Herbert E. Alexander). The report said existing statutes were inadequate to utilize the potential "unique cleansing power" of full reporting and disclosure requirements.

Federal offices receiving reports of political expenditures were not empowered to audit the reports regularly, to prosecute for violations, or even to notify enforcement agencies of violations, the report said. Irresponsible bookkeeping and short-circuiting of funds often resulted, the report concluded. "It is impossible to ascertain with any degree of accuracy the actual amounts spent in given campaigns or campaign years.... Reports and researchers interested in digesting and passing on information contained in financial reports...are discouraged and easily misled."

Political committees, no matter how extensive their activities, were exempted from reporting their receipts and expenditures as long as they confined their activities to one state, the report said. The report deplored the total absence of requirements for federal reports from Congressional candidates (or committees) in primary campaigns, state conventions or caucuses. Candidates for President and Vice President were exempted from reporting their expenditures, the report noted.

The report recommended:

- Extension of scope and coverage of existing disclosure law to include reports by candidates and committees in campaigns for federal offices, including primaries and nominating conventions; to require reports by all political committees, even if they operate only in one state, if they raise or spend $1,000 or more to influence federal elections in any one year; to require reports of candidates for nomination and election for President and Vice President; to reorder and rationalize the number, timing and content of reports.
- Establishment of a registration system applying to political committees which plan to raise or spend $1,000 or more in any year influencing federal elections.
- Establishment of a Registry of Election Finances, to be located in the Library of Congress, which would audit, tabulate, summarize and preserve reported data and publish findings in such a way as to give them maximum publicity.

- Device of a system of coding receipts and disbursements on the reporting form for candidates and committees to simplify work of those submitting and those receiving reports; in addition, a model accounting procedure and model reporting form.
- Creation of a system of enforcement based on the principle of public, press and opposition vigilance, backed up by the possibility of court suits, Department of Justice prosecutions or Congressional investigations.

"Clearly, improvements designed to ensure a comprehensive publicity system could make public disclosure of campaign funds an effective force in American society," the report said. The result would be a greater chance "for the election of officials free of commitments or obligations (expressed or implied) contrary to the public interest."

Attempt to Amend Law

Early in 1960, the Senate Jan. 25 passed the so-called "clean elections" bill (S 2436), sponsored by the late Sen. Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.).

The bill would have replaced the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925. It would have required spending reports to be filed by political committees operating entirely within a single state if they spent more than $2,500 in connection with any federal election, and would have required candidates for nomination to federal office to report on money spent in connection with state primaries. The measure also would have limited over-all contributions by any one individual to $10,000.

There was no action in the House, however, throughout the entire 1960 session and the bill died when the 86th Congress adjourned. (See story p. 288)

STATE BREAKDOWN OF $900 OR MORE CONTRIBUTIONS IN 1959

Following is a state list of individuals and groups contributing $900 or more to political organizations in 1959.

This information was obtained from reports filed by the organizations with the Clerk of the House. Of 49 committees submitting reports, eighteen noted individual and group contributions of $900 or more. These groups are identified after each contribution, according to the key (see box).

The Hatch Act makes it illegal for one person to give more than $5,000 to one group or individual, but permits him to give that amount to any number of different organizations. Family members are regarded individually under the law.

Every state, as well as the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and Brazil had $900 donors.

When an individual or group contributed $900 or over more than once to the same organization during the year, the separate contributions have been combined in some cases.

MINOR PARTIES AND STATE REFERENDA IN 1960 ELECTION

Eleven minor political parties entered candidates in the 1960 Presidential elections. (There were two separate Conservative and two separate Constitution parties.) Electors pledged to these candidates ran in the states indicated in parenthesis.

Conservative party -- Ex-Gov. J. Bracken Lee (R Utah 1949-57) for President; Kent H. Courtney for Vice President. (N.J.)

Conservative party -- C. Benton Coiner of Waynesboro, Va., for President; Edward J. Silverman for Vice President. (Va.)

Constitution party -- Brig. Gen. Merritt B. Curtis (USMC - ret.) of Washington, D.C., for President; B.M. Miller of Arlington, Va., for Vice President. (Wash.)

Constitution party -- Charles L. Sullivan of Clarksdale, Miss., for President; Merritt B. Curtis of Washington, D.C., for Vice President. (Texas)

Independent Afro-American Unity party -- Rev. Clennon King of Albany, Ga., for President. (Ala.)

Liberal party -- Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) for President; Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) for Vice President. (N.Y.)

National States Rights party -- Gov. Orval Faubus (D Ark.) for President; Adm. John G. Crommelin (USN - ret.) of Wetumpka, Ala., for Vice President. (Ala., Ark., Tenn.)

Prohibition party -- Rev. Rutherford L. Decker of Kansas City, Mo., for President; E. Harold Munn of Hillsdale, Mich., for Vice President. (Ala., Calif., Ind., Kan., Mass., Mich., Mont., N.M., Tenn., Texas)

Socialist Labor party -- Eric Hass of New York City for President; Mrs. Georgia Cozzini of Milwaukee, Wis., for Vice President. (Ariz., Colo., Ind., Iowa, Mass., Mich., N.J., N.M., Pa., Wash., Wis., Va.) The Hass-Cozzini ticket also ran under the name of Industrial Government party, Minn.

Socialist Workers party -- Farrell Dobbs of New York City for President; Myra Tanner Weiss of New York City for Vice President (Colo., Ill., Mich., Minn., Mont., N.J., N.Y., N.D., Pa., Wis.) The ticket also ran under the name of Farmer Labor party, Iowa)

Tax Cut party -- Lar Daly of Chicago, Ill., for President; B.M. Miller for Vice President. (Mich.)

The Socialist party May 28-30 met in Washington, D.C., and voted not to run a national ticket, for the first time since 1900.

State Referenda

Predominant among the issues considered by various states in the Nov. 8 elections were bond issue approvals totaling some $3 billion. Largest of these was the $1,750,000,000 issue for the Feather River project, a water supply system in California, transferring water from the wet northern areas of the state to the south. Other state decisions:

At least 11 states (Idaho, Kansas, Maine, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Oregon, South Carolina, Utah) authorized some provision for continuity of state government in case of enemy attack.

California voters turned down a proposal which would have given Los Angeles county seven state senators instead of the one it had, and would have given the southern areas of the state half of the 40 state senate seats. The south had only 10 of the 40 seats.

Michigan voters chose to raise the limit on the state sales tax from three to four percent, although they also elected to the Governorship John B. Swainson (D) who had opposed the proposal in his campaign and was expected to act against it when in office. Legislation is required before a raise actually goes into effect.

Idaho voters rejected a proposition which would have lowered the state's voting age from 21 to 19.

Washingtonians turned down a proposition which would have permitted aliens to own land.

Arkansas voters, while returning Gov. Orval Faubus (D) by a large margin, rejected a Faubus-endorsed proposal which would have facilitated opposition to integration court orders by permitting local school districts to vote to close schools and substitute tuition grants from public school monies.

Mississippians approved a constitutional amendment refusing the right to vote to anyone "not of good moral character." Circuit clerks would have the power of deciding who is fit to vote under the amendment. Gov. Ross R. Barnett (D) had backed the amendment to "help protect our way of life." Former Gov. James P. Coleman (D 1956-60) opposed the amendment. The state also accepted an amendment eliminating a requirement that the state provide free public schools, thus permitting the legislature to close any public school which came under an integration order.

CQ Fact Sheet On Reapportionment

9 STATES TO GAIN, 16 TO LOSE CONGRESSIONAL SEATS

The Bureau of the Census Nov. 15 announced nine states were to gain seats and 16 states were to lose seats in the U.S. House as a result of reapportionment based on the 1960 population census. (For final census figures, see chart p. 813)

Barring action to the contrary by the Congress, the new apportionment figures would take effect in the 1962 general election for the 88th and for succeeding Congresses through 1972.

The distribution of electoral votes for the Presidential elections of 1964 and 1968 was also determined by the new apportionment, since each state has as many electoral votes as it has Senators and Representatives.

Projected Changes

The following nine states stood to gain seats as a result of the new apportionment: Arizona, 1; California, 8; Florida, 4; Hawaii, 1; Maryland, 1; Michigan, 1; New Jersey, 1; Ohio, 1; and Texas, 1.

The following 16 states stood to lose seats: Alabama 1; Arkansas, 2; Illinois, 1; Iowa, 1; Kansas, 1; Kentucky, 1; Maine, 1; Massachusetts, 2; Minnesota, 1; Mississippi, 1; Missouri, 1; Nebraska, 1; New York, 2; North Carolina, 1; Pennsylvania, 3; and West Virginia, 1.

The other 25 states would have the same number of Representatives they had been allotted since January 1953, or, in the case of Alaska since July 1958 when the state was admitted to the Union.

The projected eight-seat gain for California would give the state a total of 38 seats, while Pennsylvania's representation, currently on a par with California at 30 seats, would drop to 27 seats. New York was scheduled to lose two seats but still to have the largest delegation with 41 seats, three more than California.

Reapportionment Ground Rules

The Constitution does not specify detailed ground rules for apportionment of House seats. Article I provides that a census shall be taken every ten years and that the Representatives shall be apportioned among the several states according to population. (The Constitution does not state specifically that an apportionment must be made every ten years; however Congress has authorized one after every Census except that of 1920.)

The constitutional provisions concerning apportionment have been the subject of some historic fights in Congress. The problem appeared to be settled by the Automatic Reapportionment Act of 1929 (amended in 1941). Under this Act the President transmits to Congress within the first week of the regular January session following every decennial census the new apportionment based on the census population figures and computed according to the method of equal proportions (see box). Within 15 days of receipt of the President's message, the Clerk of the House automatically informs the executive of each state of the number of Members to which his state is entitled in the following Congress. (The Act requires the Bureau of the Census to submit the new population figures, broken down by states, to the President before Dec. 1 of the year of every decennial census.)

HOW BIG A HOUSE?

The size of the House is up to Congress to determine. The only thing the Constitution says on the subject is that there shall be no more than one Representative for every 30,000 people. That was a realistic figure in 1787, but if applied to the results of the 1960 census, would result in a House of 5,977 members.

The Constitution provided for the first apportionment among the original 13 states, and set the size of the House at 65 Members, pending the census of 1790. Since then there has been a steady increase in the number of Representatives as prescribed by Congress over the years.

The Alaska and Hawaii statehood bills provided for the temporary addition of one Congressman for each state. But unless Congress takes further action, House membership will revert from the current 437 to 435 seats starting in 1963, with the other states absorbing the proportionate loss in Representatives necessary to give Alaska and Hawaii permanent representation under the 435-Member figure established since 1911.

The Census Bureau Nov. 15 told Congressional Quarterly that if Alaska and Hawaii had not been admitted to the Union, one seat less would have been lost by each of three states -- Massachusetts, Missouri and Pennsylvania -- as a result of the 1960 census.

Mathematics of Reapportionment

Agreement on a mathematical formula to apportion House seats among the states caused prolonged political argument during the 19th Century. In the 1929 Automatic Reapportionment Act the Congress prescribed that the so-called "method of equal proportions" should henceforth be used in allotting seats. This method, in contrast to others, gives no mathematical advantage to either big or little states.

The method of equal proportions follows:

- The first 50 seats are assigned one to each state, since the Constitution says every state must have at least one Representative.
- The population of each state is multiplied by a series of multipliers previously computed.
- The products of these multiplications are arranged in order of size, beginning with the largest, to form what is known as a priority list.
- Seats numbered 51 through 435 are then distributed according to this priority list.

(For a more detailed explanation, see Floyd M. Riddick, "The United States Congress Organization and Procedure," pp. 6-10.)

Some observers believe pressures may mount in Congress to increase the permanent House membership figure beyond 435 to avoid the loss of Congressional seats by the 13 states now scheduled to lose them. If the House were to be expanded sufficiently to prevent any losses, however, its total membership would have to rise by 112 seats to a total of 547 seats. Under that apportionment New York would have 51 seats, California 48 and Pennsylvania 35. Constitutionally, Congress has the right to change House membership at any time and could do so even after the states were informed in January 1961 of new figures under the 435-seat limit of the Automatic Reapportionment Act. As a practical matter, any action to increase the size of the House would almost have to occur in 1961 if it were to take effect for the 1962 elections. In 1962 many state legislatures will not be in session, requiring special calls if they were given new House seat allotments. Furthermore, preparations will begin early in 1962 for Congressional primaries set to begin in April of that year.

One anticipated result of the new apportionment was a sharply increased number of retirements by older House Members who would not wish to make the extraordinary efforts often necessary to win election from a drastically altered Congressional district.

Outlook in the States

If a state loses seats, the legislature must reapportion the Congressional seats before 1962 or all of the state's Representatives will be forced to run at large. Although this has occurred occasionally in the past, seasoned politicians usually seek to avoid state-wide elections of Congressmen. Individual constituencies lose their special representation and veteran Congressmen with important seniority in Washington may lose their posts.

If a state gains new seats, only the additional Representatives must run at large unless the legislature makes a new apportionment. The old Congressional districts remain intact until the legislature acts. In some instances states have chosen to run one Congressman at large rather than disturb old constituencies through redistricting.

If a state's apportionment does not change following a census, there is no necessity for redistricting. Sometimes states redistrict because of major changes in population within the state which are reflected by census statistics. In the decade following the 1950 census, however, only two of the states whose apportionment was not changed by the census actually redistricted. They were Illinois (in 1951) and Ohio (in 1952).

From time to time legislation is proposed to require states to draw Congressional District lines which are relatively contiguous and which contain roughly equal numbers of population. Such a bill (HR 73), sponsored by House Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), was approved March 23 by Judiciary Subcommittee No. 2, but there was no further action in either the House or Senate during the 86th Congress.

Historically, parties controlling the governorship and both chambers of the state legislatures have frequently run roughshod over the interests of the minority party in the state by carving out gerrymandered or malapportioned districts. The chart on the following page shows the state situation following the 1960 state elections.

House membership was increased two seats because of admission of Hawaii and Alaska, both of which received a single House seat. With new apportionment, House figure returns to a normal 435 figure set by Congress in 1911. Electoral votes, which are based on the total number of House members and Senators from each state, will also decline by two.*

Special Report

PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION LISTS GOALS FOR 1960s

The President's Commission on National Goals Nov. 27 issued a 31-page report setting forth a series of broad social, economic and political objectives requiring national attention during the 1960s. Prepared at the President's request (see box) and completed on the eve of his retirement from office, the report was published Dec. 12 in book form, along with analytical chapters by 16 contributors, and given wide publicity through the efforts of the Advertising Council.

Viewed in the light of the 1960 election campaign, the report underscored the wide area of agreement among Americans, regardless of party, concerning the urgent tasks facing the nation in the next decade. Although the Commission's recommendations were generalized and for the most part, silent on the issue of "means," they reflected much of the same concerns voiced by both party platforms and by the two Presidential candidates, Vice President Nixon and Sen. Kennedy.

Members of the 11-man Commission were as follows:

Dr. Henry M. Wriston (Chairman), president of the American Assembly, former president of Brown University.

Frank Pace Jr. (Vice Chairman), chairman of the board, General Dynamics Corp., former Army Secretary.

Erwin D. Canham, editor, Christian Science Monitor.

James B. Conant, former Ambassador to Germany and president of Harvard University.

Colgate W. Darden Jr., former Governor of Virginia and president of the University of Virginia.

Crawford H. Greenewalt, president, E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.

Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, president, American Red Cross, former Supreme Allied Commander in Europe.

Learned Hand, former judge, U.S. Court of Appeals.

Clark Kerr, president, University of California.

James R. Killian Jr., chairman, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, former scientific advisor to the President.

George Meany, president, AFL-CIO.

Illness prevented Judge Hand from taking part in the Commission's study, which was administered by the American Assembly of Columbia University.

Background

In his State of the Union message of Jan. 9, 1959, President Eisenhower announced his intention to appoint a committee of "selfless, able and devoted individuals, outside of government," to draw up a set of national goals. Such a project, he said, would "update and supplement" the study on Recent Social Trends, produced by President Hoover's Research Committee on Social Trends, a six-member group of social scientists appointed in December 1929 and headed by Dr. Wesley C. Mitchell. The Mitchell Committee's three-year survey, financed by a $600,000 grant from the Rockefeller Foundation, culminated in a 1,500-page report, backed by 13 volumes of supporting data, published shortly before the inauguration of President Roosevelt.

More than a year passed before President Eisenhower announced Feb. 3, 1960 the appointment of Dr. Henry M. Wriston as chairman of the Commission on National Goals. During the interim, the President explained on several occasions that the delay was occasioned by difficulties in securing foundation support for the project, which he had insisted be privately financed. The President was also reported as having had trouble in persuading a number of persons to accept the chairmanship of a policy-recommending group shortly before a national election.

Funds for the project were supplied by grants from the Carnegie Corp., Falk Foundation, Ford Foundation, Johnson Foundation, Richardson Foundation, Rockefeller Foundation, Sloan Foundation, and U.S. Steel Foundation. Cost of the project was $400,000.

Conclusions

The Commission's report was organized under three headings -- Goals at Home, Goals Abroad, and A Financial Accounting. Following, in the order of their appearance, are the major conclusions reached, to some of which certain members took exception.

The Individual. "The status of the individual must remain our primary concern." The report emphasized the values of diversity, calling for resistance to the "subtle and powerful pressures toward conformity," and warned that "unity of purpose must never be confused with unanimity of opinion."

Equality. "Vestiges of religious prejudice, handicaps to women, and most important, discrimination on the basis of race must be recognized as morally wrong, economically wasteful, and in many respects dangerous. In this decade we must sharply lower these last stubborn barriers." To that end, the report said, federal funds should not go to employers discriminating against Negroes, and "similar policies should progressively be applied to federal grants for universities, hospitals, and airports, and to federal housing programs." Regarding segregation in schools the report said: "By 1970 discrimination in higher education should be entirely overcome. Every state must make progress in good faith toward desegregation of publicly supported schools."

The Democratic Process. To improve the functioning of democratic institutions, the report called for reforms in Congressional procedures, a better information job by newspapers and television, the development of interest groups "which represent broader interests such as consumers and taxpayers," and the establishment of "a true senior civil service." On the role of various governments the report said: "National, state, and local governments collaborate and share power in many domestic concerns. To ensure dispersion of power within the system without obstructing solution of pressing national problems, we must pursue the following primary objectives: enlarge local discretion, as for example in the handling of matching federal grants; increase the financial resources of state and local governments; represent urban populations more equitably in those state legislatures where they are now under-represented; further develop limited metropolitan authorities or governments."

Education. Calling for improvement at all levels, the report said that "within the next decade at least two-thirds of the youth in every state should complete 12 years of schooling and at least one-third enter college." The report said public and private annual expenditures for education should double by 1970 to $40 billion, amounting to 5 percent or more of gross national product as against less than 4 percent in 1960. Federal-state-local education spending by 1970 must rise to $33 billion, the report said, and "the federal role must now be expanded" to include "increased scholarship and loan funds, support of research as an essential part of the education process, and direct assistance for buildings and equipment."

The Arts and Sciences. The report called for increased emphasis on basic research, more efficient use of available manpower, and a "highly selective" approach to space programs. In the eyes of posterity, the report said, "the success of the United States as a civilized society will be largely judged by the creative activities of its citizens in art, architecture, literature, music, and the sciences."

The Democratic Economy. Calling for limited government participation in the economy, the report endorsed continued reliance on collective bargaining and the use of labor-management-public conferences to shed light on the "welfare of the economy as a whole." Corporations and labor unions, the report said, "must limit the influence they exert on the private lives of their members." Calling women "the country's largest pool of inadequately used ability," the report urged removal of barriers to their employment.

Economic Growth. Avoiding a fixed goal for the rate of growth, the report said "the economy should grow at a maximum rate consistent with primary dependence upon free enterprise and the avoidance of marked inflation." But, it noted, "the higher the growth rate, the fewer additional extraordinary measures will be necessary. If the growth rate is lower, it will impel consideration of higher taxes, increased quantity of labor, and the greater individual effort and sacrifice exemplified by forced savings and reduced consumption." As one goal, the report said, "we must seek to keep unemployment consistently below 4 percent of the labor force."

Technological Change. It "should be promoted and encouraged as a powerful force for advancing our economy. It should be planned for and introduced with sensitive regard for any adverse impact upon individuals." The report called for improved management of federal procurement programs, retraining of displaced workers, and various steps to assist economically distressed areas.

Agriculture. To reduce oversupply, the report recommended "much increased retirement of farm land," and stepped-up efforts to expand domestic and foreign markets for farm products. But for "the 50 percent of farmers who operate at subsistence levels and produce only 10 percent of farm output," the report said "new opportunities must be found through training and through location of new industries in farm areas." All told, non-farm jobs would have to be found for 1.5 million farm operators during the 1960s.

Living Conditions. "We must remedy slum conditions, reverse the process of decay in the larger cities, and relieve the necessity for low-income and minority groups to concentrate there." The report endorsed stepped-up urban renewal programs ("costing as much as $4 billion per year"), an increased rate of construction of lower-priced homes and apartment units, and an equitable sharing of costs between central cities and suburbs.

Health and Welfare. To meet the demand for medical care, the report called for continued federal grants for hospital construction and their extension to other medical facilities. "The extension of medical insurance is necessary," the report said, without specifying use of the social security system. The Federal Government should encourage the states to improve their systems of unemployment benefits.

Foreign Policy. "The United States, though omnipresent, is not omnipotent. We and the nations which share our basic aims cannot hope always to prevent violence, the corruption of nationalist movements to Communist ends, or other adverse developments." Steps to be taken include the further reduction of tariffs and quota restrictions "while safeguarding the national economy against market disruption, against destructive competition as a result of grossly lower unit labor costs, and to preserve national defense"; an increase in U.S. public and private investment in underdeveloped areas from $3.4 billion a year to $5-to-$5.5 billion by 1965; and encouraging "far larger numbers of qualified Americans to live and work abroad."

Defense of the Free World. "We must stand firm wherever, as in Berlin, our commitments and interests are squarely opposed to those of the Soviets. At whatever cost, we must maintain strategic and tactical forces of sufficient strength to deter the Communist powers from surprise attack and to cope with military aggression even on a limited scale.... For the common defense, we must maintain and strengthen our military alliances."

Disarmament. "Since a major nuclear war would be a world catastrophe, the limitation and control of nuclear armament is imperative.... Our immediate task must be the step-by-step advance toward control of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, with effective international inspection.... In view of the complex interaction of arms control and national security, we must organize a major government effort for the study and analysis of political, military, and technical issues in order to provide a sounder basis for policy formulation and negotiation."

The United Nations. "A key goal in the pursuit of a vigorous and effective United States foreign policy is the preservation and strengthening of the United Nations.... On occasion, the growing bloc of votes from the new and uncommitted nations may turn a decision in the United Nations against our interests." But the U.S. must give the UN steadfast support.

A Financial Accounting. Pointing to the likelihood of increased costs in certain areas, the report concluded that "aggregate tax rates will continue at something like their present level through the decade, and may even have to be increased." Meanwhile, "the federal tax system should be revised to eliminate unjustified exceptions to its general rules, to assure equitable treatment of all types of incomes, to encourage the accumulation of risk capital so vital to economic growth, and to remedy the many contradictions and flaws that have grown up within the system."

CQ Fact Sheet On John F. Kennedy

Biography of John F. Kennedy

Sen. John F. Kennedy's nomination for the Presidency on the Democratic ticket climaxed four years of careful planning and organization by Kennedy and his close associates. But in addition to his own formidable political skills, Kennedy drew on a family, ethnic and educational heritage which both conditioned and launched him into the quest for the Presidency and its powers and responsibilities. This Fact Sheet reviews Kennedy's life, his political career and his record in the Congress up to the time of his nomination.

Biography

John Fitzgerald Kennedy was born May 29, 1917 in Brookline, Mass., near Boston. After going to both private and public schools in Brookline and New York City, he attended the Canterbury School at New Milford, Conn., a non-parochial Catholic school, 1930-31, and the Choate School at Wallingford, Conn., 1931-35. He began college at Princeton after some 1935 summer work at the London School of Economics but his year was cut short by an attack of jaundice and in 1936 he entered Harvard. He received his B.S. with honors in political science in 1940 and then briefly attended the business school at Stanford University. Kennedy travelled extensively during his youth. (See box, p. 836)

In September 1941 he enlisted in the Navy and in 1943 was a lieutenant (j.g.) in command of a P.T. boat in the South Pacific. His ship was rammed by a Japanese destroyer and the injured Kennedy managed a nine day struggle for survival for himself and ten sick and injured men through Japanese islands. He was awarded the Navy and Marine Corps medal and the Purple Heart.

In 1945, a full lieutenant, he was released because of injuries. He became a correspondent for the International News Service and covered the San Francisco United Nations Conference, the Potsdam conference and the 1945 British elections.

Kennedy married the former Jacqueline Lee Bouvier on Sept. 9, 1953. Mrs. Kennedy was born July 28, 1930. A Newport, R.I., and New York debutante (the "loveliest of the year" 1948, according to news reports), she attended Vassar and the Sorbonne and received her degree from George Washington University. A student of languages, she speaks French, Spanish and Italian. She was inquiring photographer for the Washington Times Herald.

The Kennedys' daughter, Caroline, was born Nov. 27, 1957, their son, John Fitzgerald Jr., Nov. 25, 1960. They are Roman Catholics and attend the Holy Trinity Church in Washington, D.C.

Kennedy has written three books. The first, Why England Slept, published in 1940, was developed from his Harvard senior thesis and discusses England's lack of preparation for the Second World War. Profiles in Courage, published in 1956, was written while Kennedy was recovering from a back operation and received the Pulitzer prize for biography in 1957. It is a series of biographical essays on Senators who displayed political courage. The Strategy of Peace, edited by Allan Nevins and published in 1960, is a collection of Kennedy's speeches and statements on foreign policy, peace and defense. In addition, Kennedy edited a privately printed collection of tributes to his elder brother, Joseph P. Kennedy Jr., who was killed on a World War II mission, As We Remembered Joe, published in 1945.

Kennedy enjoys active sports, particularly touch football at the family home in Hyannis Port, Mass., and sailing in his boat, the Victura. His favorite reading is history and biography and he goes to the movies frequently, when time allows.

Kennedy entered politics with a 1946 race for the House of Representatives. In that campaign were the factors which have been both a detriment and an aid to Kennedy throughout his political career: his youth (he was 29), his Catholicism, his money and his family, especially his father. These intriguing and sometimes controversial aspects of the Kennedy political complex gave Kennedy a degree of publicity and national attention far beyond that of the average young politician.

Kennedy Family

Kennedy's Boston Irish family had a long political history. His maternal grandfather, John Francis Fitzgerald (Honey Fitz), was mayor of Boston and a Democratic member of the House of Representatives (1895-1901, March 1919-October 1919 -- he was succeeded in October by a man who contested his election). His paternal grandfather, Patrick J. Kennedy, served in both houses of the Massachusetts legislature. Two great-uncles were state senators.

Kennedy's father, Joseph Patrick Kennedy, 71, is a millionaire who has settled large sums on his children, of whom seven of nine are living. His businesses have included a chain of movie theaters, shipbuilding, banking, and Chicago's Merchandise Mart. The senior Kennedy was an early supporter of Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Roosevelt appointed him to the Securities and Exchange Commission, where he served as chairman, 1934-35. He was chairman of the U.S. Maritime Commission in 1937. Roosevelt appointed him Ambassador to England (1938-41). In both 1947 and 1953 he was appointed to the Hoover Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government.

Joseph P. Kennedy's part in national affairs continued after 1953. President Eisenhower Jan. 13, 1956 appointed him to an eight-member board of "outstanding citizens" to review U.S. foreign intelligence activities. David J. McDonald United Steelworkers president, Jan. 7, 1960 credited Joseph Kennedy with having done "a great deal down in Wall Street to bring about this (Jan. 4, 1960 steel strike) settlement."

The elder Kennedy's activities have occasionally been a source of political embarrassment to his son. He supported British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain's agreement with Hitler at the Munich conference in 1938. The older Kennedy was a friend of Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis. 1947-57). Though present in Los Angeles throughout the 1960 Democratic National Convention, he was conspicuously absent from any convention sessions including his son's acceptance speech.

The Kennedy family is close-knit. Joseph Jr. had planned on a career in politics and after his death John, the second son, stepped into his shoes. Look magazine, Oct. 13, 1959 quoted John as saying, "Just as I went into politics because Joe died, if anything happened to me tomorrow, Bobby would run for my seat in the Senate. And if Bobby died our young brother Ted would take over for him."

Numerous and active, the Kennedy family has turned out in full force in support of their son, brother and husband since his first campaign in 1946. His brother, Robert F. Kennedy, ran his 1952 and 1960 campaigns and his brother, Edward M. Kennedy, who graduated from the University of Virginia law school in 1958, managed the 1958 Senate campaign. Kennedy's wife, his mother Rose, and three of his sisters, Eunice, Patricia and Jean have established a tradition of attending wide-spread teas and women's group meetings during which they push "Jack's" cause. Jean's husband, Stephen Smith, was a full-time worker on the 1960 campaign staff.

Robert Kennedy, 34, has become a national figure in his own right. In 1951 he was an attorney with the criminal division of the U.S. Department of Justice. He resigned in 1952 to manage his brother's Senate campaign. In 1953 he was named assistant counsel of the new Senate Government Operations Committee Permanent Investigations Subcommittee of which Sen. McCarthy was chairman. He resigned in July 1953 and for some months in 1953 and 1954, he was assistant counsel to the Hoover Commission. On Feb. 17, 1954 he rejoined the Investigations Subcommittee as chief counsel for the Democratic minority and in January 1955, when the Democrats gained control of Congress, he succeeded Roy Cohn as chief counsel and staff director. When the Subcommittee, which had begun a study of corrupt labor practices, turned its work over to the Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field in 1957, Robert became chief counsel for the new committee. It was through his part in these highly publicized investigations that he became a national figure. After resigning, Sept. 10, 1959, he wrote a book, The Enemy Within, published in 1960, based largely on the racket hearings.

Kennedy's own money and his family's have allowed him considerable freedom from many of the usual worries of candidates about publicity and travel expenses by affording him such luxuries as a private plane. They have also made him a target for charges of "buying the election." The lack of federal or state requirements for complete reporting of campaign expenditures makes it impossible to ascertain how much Kennedy spent in his Senate campaigns or in his drive for the Democratic nomination and Presidency. Observers are unanimous in agreeing that Kennedy operations have never suffered for lack of campaign funds. While Kennedy associates have estimated the total cost of the campaign for the Presidential nomination at up to $750,000, many political professionals believe the cost may have been in the millions. But there is general agreement that without Kennedy's recognized personal voter appeal, his ability to evaluate political situations and exploit them for his own benefit, and the smooth functioning of the Kennedy organization, the ample Kennedy family funds would not have won him the Presidential nomination.

Kennedy and Catholicism

While Kennedy's Catholicism was an asset in his campaigns for the heavily Catholic Massachusetts 11th District seat and is believed to have aided him in his state-wide campaigns, it became a more controversial issue when he began to seek national office. Kennedy has been questioned frequently on his attitude towards religion in politics and government. (See stories, p. 804-13)

On April 19, 1959 he said he believed religion was a proper political issue: "All questions that interest or disturb people should be answered."

Asked July 1, 1956 whether his religion had affected his legislative responsibilities, Kennedy replied, "No, I really don't -- I think your religion influences all your personal and public acts. I think it's a -- it has some effect on what you do, generally, but as far as being a Roman Catholic, whether that legislation comes up which affects the Roman Catholic faith and the Roman Catholic church, since I have been here, I don't think that that has been a major issue in almost any case I can think of."

In an interview published Feb. 16, 1959 Kennedy said "whatever one's religion in his private life, for the office holder nothing takes precedence over his oath to uphold the Constitution and all its parts including the First Amendment and the strict separation of church and state.... I believe...that the separation of church and state is fundamental to our American concept and heritage...."

In an April 21, 1960 speech to the American Society of Newspaper Editors Kennedy criticized the press for magnifying the "religious issue". He said, "There is only one legitimate question underlying all the rest: would you, as President of the United States, be responsive in any way to ecclesiastical pressures or obligations of any kind that might in any fashion influence or interfere with your conduct of that office in the national interest? I have answered that question many times. My answer was -- and is -- 'NO'."

The question of the effect of having a Catholic on national ticket came up in 1956 when Kennedy ran for the Democratic Vice Presidential nomination. Connecticut State Chairman John M. Bailey, a Kennedy supporter, distributed at the convention a 22-page memorandum prepared by Kennedy's staff, stating that "There is a Catholic vote; and it is apparent that a well-known Catholic on the Democratic ticket would allocate to that ticket an extraordinarily large portion of that vote.... Catholics constitute more than one out of every five eligible voters in the country...." A rival memorandum, presented by supporters of the candidacy of Humphrey, said that "Catholics do not vote as Catholics."

In late 1959, Dr. Daniel A. Poling, a defeated Republican candidate for Philadelphia mayor in 1951, said Kennedy had withdrawn from an appearance at a 1950 interfaith meeting at the insistence of Catholic leaders. Kennedy Jan. 14, 1960 said the facts were accurate but the conclusions drawn from them were not. He said he had been asked to the ceremony not as a Member of Congress or as an individual but "as the official representative of a religious organization." He learned after accepting the invitation, he said, that the Archdiocese of Philadelphia, for religious reasons, was unable to support the meeting. Therefore, Kennedy said, "I felt I had no credentials to attend in the capacity in which I had been asked."

Kennedy's religion was thought to have aided him in winning Catholic votes in several 1960 Presidential primaries. A predicted heavy anti-Catholic vote in heavily Protestant West Virginia failed to materialize, convincing many observers Kennedy's Catholicism would not harm the national ticket. It has been suggested that through his Catholicism Kennedy attracted national publicity which helped him win the Presidential nomination.

Election History

Kennedy, unknown as a political figure, started his first campaign early in 1946 and won a stiff Democratic primary contest for the nomination for Representative from Massachusetts' solidly Democratic 11th District (the same district his grandfather had represented). In the Nov. 5, 1946 general election he beat Lester W. Bowen (R) 69,093, to 26,007. On Nov. 2, 1948 he won reelection without opposition, receiving 106,366 votes.

He was reelected Nov. 7, 1950 over Vincent J. Celeste (R), 87,699 to 18,302.

Winning The Nomination

Jan. 2, 1960 -- Kennedy publicly announced his Presidential candidacy, climaxing three years of travel in 50 states and the building of a campaign organization.

Jan. 5 -- First big delegate break as Ohio's favorite son, Gov. Michael V. DiSalle, assured Kennedy of 74 Ohio convention votes on first ballot.

March 8 -- Kennedy pulled high vote in New Hampshire primary over nominal opposition.

April 5 -- Kennedy defeated Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.), received larger vote than Nixon in Wisconsin Presidential primary.

April 12 -- Although not entered, Kennedy led Democratic writein field in Illinois primary.

April 26 -- In all-writein Massachusetts and Pennsylvania primaries, Kennedy ran far ahead of the field.

May 3 -- Kennedy took 81 percent of Democratic vote against nominal opposition but trailed Nixon in total votes cast in Indiana primary.

May 10 -- Kennedy won unexpected and crucial victory over Humphrey in West Virginia primary; won Nebraska primary unopposed.

May 12 -- Key leaders of 114-member New York convention delegation pledged Kennedy their support.

July 10 -- With convention opening one day distant, Illinois delivered 59½ votes to Kennedy, several Governors declared for him, press association estimates put his first ballot total at 620½ votes.

July 11 -- Pennsylvania delegation announced after caucus that Kennedy would receive 64 of its 81 convention votes.

July 13 -- Kennedy nominated on first ballot with 806 votes, 45 more than the 761 votes required.

In 1952 he challenged incumbent Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge Jr. (R). Lodge, a Member of the Senate since 1937 except for two years, was a leading national supporter of Dwight David Eisenhower for the Presidency and concentrated his campaign efforts on the national race. After receiving the nomination with no primary opposition, Kennedy Nov. 4 beat Lodge, 1,211,984 to 1,141,247 (51.3 percent of the total vote to 48.3 percent). Republican Presidential candidate Eisenhower led Democratic candidate Adlai E. Stevenson in Massachusetts 1,292,325 to 1,083,525 (54.2 percent to 45.5 percent).

Kennedy nominated Adlai E. Stevenson for the Presidential nomination at the 1956 Democratic National Convention. Kennedy came in second to Sen. Estes Kefauver in the balloting for the Vice Presidential nomination after Stevenson threw the choice open to the convention. Kennedy led Kefauver at the end of the second ballot 618 to 551½ but several states which had supported Sen. Albert Gore (Tenn.) started a movement to Kefauver after Gore withdrew.

Kennedy was reelected to the Senate Nov. 4, 1958 over Vincent J. Celeste (R), also a Catholic, 1,362,962 to 488,318 (73.2 percent of the total vote to 26.2 percent). In the gubernatorial election of that year Foster Furcolo (D) beat Charles Gibbons (R) 1,067,020 to 818,463 (56.2 percent to 43.1 percent).

Kennedy joined the Democratic Advisory Council Nov. 12, 1959. He began his campaign for the 1960 Presidential race early, in line with his usual campaign practice. A Dec. 9, 1958 Congressional Quarterly story showed that Kennedy had averaged at least two major speeches a week outside of Massachusetts and had visited 47 of 49 states during 1957 and 1958.

In the statement announcing his candidacy Jan. 2, 1960, Kennedy said, "In the past 40 months I have toured every state in the union and I have talked to Democrats in all walks of life. My candidacy is therefore based on the conviction that I can win both the nomination and the election. I believe that any Democratic aspirant to this important nomination should be willing to submit to the voters his views, record and competence in a series of primary contests." Kennedy's nomination after winning in the primaries helped prove their political value, but also drew criticism from opponents who cited his poor Senate attendance record while campaigning (see p. 838)

McCarthy Issue

An issue which has haunted Kennedy politically is his lack of a stand on the 1954 censure of Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis. 1947-57), and "McCarthyism."

In pain and on crutches for a good part of 1954 due to a back injury dating from Harvard football and his wartime P.T. boat injury, Kennedy underwent a serious operation Oct. 21 in a New York Hospital. The Senate voted to censure McCarthy on Dec. 2, during a special session. Kennedy left the hospital Dec. 21 and went immediately to the family home in Palm Beach to recuperate. He did not return to the Senate until May 24, 1955.

Kennedy's only recorded vote directly connected with the McCarthy proceedings was an Aug. 2, 1954 vote for a motion by Senate Majority Leader William F. Knowland (R Calif. 1945-59) which, by 75-12, sent the censure resolution to a select committee which would report to the Senate subsequently, thereby postponing the final vote. Kennedy did not announce at the time how he would have voted on the actual censure motion.

People close to Kennedy have said that he has not wished to make a statement because to do so at such a late date would appear to be a purely political move.

In response to a question from a Dartmouth College audience March 6, 1960 Kennedy said, "If you are in the hospital, I suggest that there are other things on your mind than following what's going on before some committee."

Asked May 4, 1960 if he was "willing to take a definite stand on Senator McCarthy," Kennedy replied, "Yes, I have. I said that I'd support the censure. On many occasions I stated that."

Kennedy's Health

A June 11 statement by Kennedy's doctors, Eugene J. Cohen and Janet Travell, said, "Your health is excellent. Your vitality, endurance and resistance to infection are above average. Your ability to handle an exhausting work load is...superior."

The college and wartime back injuries which required major surgery (a double fusion of spinal discs) in 1954-55 appear to pose no further problem. During the war Kennedy got malaria, with a partial adrenal insufficiency (fully controllable by oral medication), which some doctors might have diagnosed as a mild form of Addison's disease.

His alleged failure to take a stand on the McCarthy question has brought Kennedy some sharp criticism, notably from Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. She remarked on a Dec. 7, 1958 television program that she did not want a President "who understands what courage is, and admires it but has not quite the independence to have it." She has also claimed that Kennedy's father was spending great sums to have his son elected and expressed doubts about Kennedy's ability to separate duties to church and state.

Record in Congress

House

During his six years in the House of Representatives (1947-52), Kennedy served on the Education and Labor Committee. He was a member of the Subcommittee on Education. In 1949 he was selected as a member of the Joint Committee on Labor-Management Relations.

Kennedy dissented when the Education and Labor Committee reported the Hartley labor bill to the floor in 1947. In the House, Kennedy said the bill would "strike down in one devastating blow the union shop, industry-wide bargaining, and so strangle collective bargaining with restraints and limitations as to make it ineffectual."

In the House Kennedy was a strong supporter of housing legislation. In 1949 he introduced a measure authorizing up to $1 billion annually in federal loans to families of moderate means for housing projects.

Kennedy favored federal aid to education and in 1949 introduced a bill authorizing $300 million annually in federal grants to states to assist elementary and secondary schools, with some aid for non-public schools.

As a House Member Kennedy also served on the District of Columbia Committee. In 1949 he was appointed chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Utilities, Banking and Insurance. Three bills affecting the District of Columbia which Kennedy introduced became law.

Senate

On entering the Senate in January 1953 Kennedy was appointed to the Labor and Public Welfare Committee. He served as chairman of the Railroad Retirement Subcommittee (1955-56) and as chairman of the Labor Subcommittee (1957-present). Chairmanship of the latter subcommittee made it possible for Kennedy to emerge as the chief Senate sponsor of labor reform legislation in 1958 and 1959. From 1953 to 1956 Kennedy was a member of the Government Operations Committee, serving as chairman of the Subcommittee on Reorganization, which dealt with the Hoover Commission proposals, during the 84th Congress.

From 1956 to May 1957 Kennedy served on the Special Committee to Investigate Lobbying. He was a member of the Select Committee on Small Business (1955-56) and the Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field, known as the McClellan Committee (1957-1960). Kennedy was chairman of the Special Committee to Select Five Outstanding Senators (1957).

In 1957 Kennedy moved onto the Foreign Relations Committee. During the 85th Congress he was chairman of the International Organization Affairs Subcommittee, and in 1960 served as chairman of the African Affairs Subcommittee.

Since 1959 Kennedy served on the Joint Economic Committee.

Kennedy's legislative interests while in the Senate were primarily in the foreign affairs and labor fields.

He proposed July 2, 1957 that the U.S. support Algeria's effort to gain independence from France.

In 1958 Kennedy's Foreign Relations Committee International Organization Affairs Subcommittee, with Administration support, supported an amendment to amend the Battle Act to allow aid to Russian satellite nations. A June 5 amendment by Senate Minority Leader William F. Knowland (R Calif. 1945-59) struck the amendment from the bill after Knowland said the President still supported the language but would request it in separate legislation. (1958 Almanac p. 186) In 1959 Kennedy introduced a similar bill for the Administration (S 1697) which passed the Senate Sept. 12. (1959 Almanac p. 196)

On April 24, 1959 he joined Sens. Humphrey and J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) in proposing Mutual Security Program amendments designed to increase aid and reduce the purely military considerations in the formulation of the program.

Kennedy in 1959 introduced a highly controversial bill (S 819) to eliminate from the National Defense Education Act of 1958 a provision requiring loyalty oaths and affidavits from aid recipients. The Senate recommitted the bill July 23, 1959. (1959 Almanac p. 299) In 1960 Kennedy cosponsored a new bill (S 2929) to repeal the affidavit alone. His measure was passed by the Senate, in amended form, June 15. (See story p. 238)

Kennedy and Labor

Kennedy belonged to labor committees during his entire Congressional career and was a sponsor of major labor legislation. The over-all satisfaction of most AFL-CIO leaders with Kennedy's labor record was reflected in their quick endorsement of his Presidential candidacy following his nomination in Los Angeles July 13.

For several years Kennedy was the one chief sponsor of legislation to establish minimum federal standards for the unemployment insurance system, instead of leaving standards to the discretion of the individual states. He sponsored a bill (S 791) to provide uniform benefits payments for at least 39 weeks, at not less than 50 percent of the average earnings of the state's workers.

Kennedy in 1959 introduced the Democratic minimum wage bill (S 1046), backed by the AFL-CIO, which would raise the wage from $1 to $1.25 an hour and extend coverage. The bill was at odds with a more restricted Administration bill. The revised Kennedy bill died in conference in 1960. (See story p. 309)

In 1958 Kennedy introduced a bill (S 3974) which became the first major labor relations bill to pass either house since the Taft-Hartley Act of 1947. The bill dealt largely with the control of union abuses exposed by the McClellan committee but did not incorporate tough Taft-Hartley amendments requested by the President. It survived Senate floor attempts to include Taft-Hartley amendments and gained passage but was rejected by the House. (1958 Almanac p. 191)

The bill Kennedy introduced in 1959 was substantially the same bill which had passed the Senate in 1958. It was considered a "moderate" bill, concerned primarily with financial and electoral misconduct of union officials. Reported by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare committee as a clean bill, although with only minor amendments, S 1555 was "beefed-up" in Senate floor action sufficiently so that the AFL-CIO dubbed the version that went to the House "anti-labor".

Strong Taft-Hartley provisions added by the House, in its substitution of the Landrum-Griffin bill for the Senate version, were fought by Kennedy as chairman of a 12-day conference committee. The final bill was largely the House bill, but Kennedy and others succeeded in getting House conferees to soften their Taft-Hartley provisions by including several exemptions for unions. (1959 Almanac p. 156)

Kennedy Sept. 3 said of the final version, "The bill is a compromise. I must frankly state that it goes a good deal further in some areas than I think is either desirable or necessary -- this is especially true of the Taft-Hartley amendments.... The bill is not the bill I should have preferred to see passed by Congress...(but) I think substantial progress was made (in conference).... I have no apologies at all for the bill we are now bringing before the Senate.... I do not claim it is a perfect bill or that it is a model of fairness. But taking it as a whole, it is the best bill we can pass."

The bill has been a key to organized labor's stand in the 1960 elections. Reactions from various labor leaders:

- The AFL-CIO Sept. 2, 1959 praised Kennedy and "the liberal majority of Senate conferees" for doing "a good job of eliminating some of the more obvious injustices."
- Sept. 22, 1959, Kennedy was denounced before the AFL-CIO convention by Michael Quill, president of the Transport Workers Union, and Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union.
- At a Nov. 10, 1959 meeting of the Industrial Union Department of the AFL-CIO Walter P. Reuther, President of the United Auto Workers, led a group proposing a resolution praising Kennedy and five others for their work in modifying the bill in conference. The convention's resolution's committee killed the resolution after officials of the International Assn. of Machinists registered protests.
- International Brotherhood of Teamsters president James R. Hoffa Nov. 3, 1959 announced a broad political campaign for 1960 and attacked Kennedy saying "We don't support spoiled millionaries."

After his nomination for the Presidency, Kennedy July 31, 1960 said he would press for passage of five measures during the August session of Congress: medical aid to the aged through the Social Security System; the minimum-wage bill; the common-site picketing bill; aid to education; and an omnibus housing measure. Despite his efforts, none of the five was enacted. (See stories p. 148, 309, 320, 232, 271)

VOTING SCORES

CQ's Voting Participation Scores measure the percentage of roll calls on which a Member votes; On the Record Scores measure the percentage of times a Member went on the record on a roll-call vote; Party Unity and Party Opposition Scores measure the percentage of times a Member voted with or in opposition to the majority of his party on roll-call votes when his party opposed the stand taken by the opposition majority; Presidential Support and Opposition Scores measure the percentage of times a Member supported the Presidential position on roll-call votes; Conservative Coalition Scores measure the percentage of times a Member supported or opposed the stand of Republicans and Southern Democrats when they formed a coalition against Northern Democrats on roll-call votes.

Here are Kennedy's scores since he became a Member of the Senate in 1953: (A blank indicates that CQ did not make the study in that year.)

Congress	Voting Participation	On The Record	Presidential Support	Presidential Opposition	Party Unity	Party Opposition	Conservative Coalition Support	Conservative Coalition Opposition
83rd	81%	92%	43%	35%	69%
84th	60	92	34	22	56	17%
85th	83	99	48	35	70	10
1959	77	100	31	48	70	9	2%	65%
1960	35	99	27	20	47	1	0	48

In 1955, when he was recovering from his operation, Kennedy was the lowest ranking Democrat in Voting Participation and the second lowest in On the Record Scores. In 1959, he was in a three-way tie for fourth lowest Democrat in voting participation. In 1960 he was second lowest in voting participation.

BIOGRAPHIES OF NEWLY ELECTED SENATORS

(As of their election, Nov. 8, 1960)

DELAWARE

J. Caleb Boggs (R)

Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, 51, served three terms in the House of Representatives (1947-53), two terms as Delaware's Governor (1953-61) and then in 1960 took on Sen. J. Allen Frear Jr. (D) for a Senate seat.

Boggs said the main issues of the 1960 campaign were: "Sound, continued growth and development in the United States. Continued responsible, mature leadership. Wisdom and strength for the preservation and growth of freedom with peace and justice."

His past record also gives a picture of his stands. In the House he voted or announced: in 1947 -- FOR the Taft-Hartley Act passage over veto; in 1948 -- FOR authorization for the European Recovery Program; in 1949 -- FOR deleting low-rent public housing from the 1949 housing act; in 1949 -- FOR extension of existing rigid price supports; in 1949 -- FOR a minimum wage of 75 cents an hour; in 1949 -- FOR cutting Mutual Defense Assistance; in 1950 -- FOR killing the technical assistance portion of the Point Four program; in 1951 -- FOR providing that the Tariff Commission should determine peril points of tariff reduction and recommend minimum rates for protection of domestic industry.

In his House career Boggs served on the House Expenditures in Executive Departments Committee and House Administration Committee in 1947 and on the Judiciary Committee for the remainder of his service. He followed a fairly conservative line, speaking against federal encroachment on "states' rights" and charging the Truman Administration with "creeping socialism" before the 1950 elections.

In 1949 he introduced a bill to make picketing of federal courts or the homes of those involved in federal cases, with intent to impede justice, illegal. In 1950 he was reported to have voted in the Judiciary Committee to approve legislation giving states clear title to all tidelands up to the three mile limit and 37½ percent of revenues from the leasing between the limit and the continental shelf. In 1951 he was one of 10 Republican Representatives to introduce legislation to recreate the Hoover Commission.

During his House terms, Boggs was "On the Record" on roll calls: 80th Congress -- 94 percent of the time; 81st Congress -- 88 percent; 82nd Congress -- 90 percent. He voted with the GOP majority: 80th Congress -- 93 percent of the time; 81st Congress -- 80 percent; 82nd Congress -- 76 percent.

In 1952 Boggs unseated incumbent Gov. Elbert N. Carvel (D) with 52.1 percent of the vote and won reelection in 1956 over H. Tyler McConnell (D) with 51.8 percent. He was ineligible for reelection in 1960.

In a Sept. 18 speech on state financing Boggs rejected highway financing by bond issues or toll projects. To earn the respect of future generations, he said, "we must supply superior public services without placing a mortgage upon future earnings of the very people we are now trying to serve."

The New York Times Aug. 6, 1959 said Boggs "has refused to call out the National Guard to enforce school integration but has made it clear he will not tolerate violence."

Boggs was born in Cheswold, Delaware May 15, 1909. He was graduated from the University of Delaware in 1931 and received his law degree from Georgetown University in 1937. He enlisted in the Delaware national guard in 1926, becoming a reserve officer that year. He served with the Armored Division during World War II from 1941-45 and is now a colonel in the Army Reserves.

He was appointed deputy judge of the family court of New Castle county in 1946 and later that year was elected to the House of Representatives after running against "the New Deal controlled Congress".

Boggs now lives in Wilmington and lists "attorney at law" as his profession. A Methodist, he is married and has two children.

IOWA

Jack Miller (R)

Jack Miller, 44, led five other candidates in the primary for the Iowa GOP Senate nomination and took 30.8 percent of the vote. Because this was less than the 35 percent required for nomination, the selection was turned over to the Iowa state convention which July 20 made Miller the first Senate candidate chosen in this fashion in Iowa history.

After the tenuous start, Miller moved into a campaign in which he stressed: "World peace, accompanied by a world disarmament program with effective inspection and controls; maintenance of a military establishment which will deter aggression"; achieving a balance of production and consumption to insure the farmer a fair return; economic and business growth through revision of the federal tax structure to encourage rather than discourage business; and prevention of increased centralized, federal control through return to the states of revenue sources.

A tax lawyer who specializes in farm tax problems, Miller urges economy in federal spending and reduction of the national debt. He has a plan for incentive taxation of growth income in which a person would pay taxes at only half the rate on the increase in his earned income over the previous year. He also advocates better credit facilities for the small farmer and a land retirement program, providing that the farmer, including tenant farmers, is well taken care of.

Miller was born June 6, 1916, in Chicago. He now lives in Sioux City. A Catholic, he is married and has four children. He served four years with the Air Force in World War II and has spent 23 years in the organized reserves where he is now a colonel.

Miller graduated from Creighton University, Omaha, took a law degree from Columbia University and did post graduate work at the University of Iowa College of Law. He worked as an attorney in the Internal Revenue Service's chief counsel's office 1946-47. He once headed the committee on tax problems of farmers of the American Bar Assn. He writes the Farmer's Tax Saver published annually by Wallace's Farmer, and has written many articles on farm taxation. He has taught at the U.S. army command and general staff school at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and at the University of Notre Dame College of Law.

Miller was a member of the Iowa house 1955-56 and has been a state senator since 1956. He lost a 1958 bid for the GOP nomination for Lieutenant Governor.

MISSOURI

Edward V. Long (D)

After the death of Sen. Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.), and after a period of much controversy within the Missouri Democratic party, Edward V. Long, 52, was selected Sept. 21 as the Democratic candidate for the special election to fill Hennings' seat. Gov. James T. Blair Jr. (D) then named Long Senator until Nov. 8 and Long opened his Washington office before beginning his campaign. Long said he would "in so far as possible" follow the Senatorial course of Hennings.

Long was born July 18, 1908 in Lincoln county, Mo. He now lives in Clarksville while practicing law in Bowling Green. He is the Baptist deacon of a "little church my great-grandfather organized." He is married and has one daughter.

Long attended Culver-Stockton College 1927-30 and the University of Missouri 1925-26. He is a past director of Rotary International and claims considerable experience overseas through the organization.

He has had many years of political experience: prosecuting attorney for Pike county, 1937-41; city attorney for Bowling Green, 1941-45; state senator 1945-58, majority floor leader 1949-54 and president pro tem 1955-56; and 1957-60 Lieutenant Governor. He was renominated to this post in the Aug. 2 primary, carrying 110 of the 114 counties and resigned Sept. 23.

Besides his law practice and his political offices, Long is president of two banks, several loan companies and life insurance companies and is considered a wealthy man. He also owns a 1,600-acre farm which he says makes no profit.

MONTANA

Lee Metcalf (D)

Rep. Lee Metcalf, 49, March 16, 1960, announced he would run in the Montana primary for the Senate nomination. Metcalf's Senate partner in introducing federal aid to education bills, Sen. James E. Murray (D), April 28 announced he was retiring from the seat and Metcalf June 7 beat Rep. LeRoy H. Anderson (D) and two others to gain the nomination. His opponent in the election race was former Rep. Orvin B. Fjare (R 1955-57).

Metcalf has a record as a leader of "liberal" House Members: in 1957 he was one of the members of the House Education and Labor Committee who voted unsuccessfully to deny chairman Graham A. Barden (D N.C.) the right to appoint subcommittee chairmen and staff members; he was one of 28 Representatives presenting a liberal program for Democrats at the beginning of the 85th Congress, one of the so-called "young Turks"; at the beginning of the 86th Congress he was one of a group who attempted to force changes in the House Rules Committee operations -- this movement came to nothing after the group met with Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas); in 1960 he was elected chairman of the Democratic Study Group.

Metcalf's record in the House indicates his position on numerous issues: He has supported natural resources and conservation legislation. As a freshman he was one of several to introduce legislation authorizing the Hell's Canyon Dam. He has sponsored lead and zinc industry protection both in Congress and through pressure on the Administration. In 1954 part of his campaign was against Republican "raids on the public domain."

He voted in the House Ways and Means Committee in 1960 to include the Forand health bill in the overall social security Act. He later called the medical care plan passed by Congress in 1960 "only the beginning."

He called "persistent resistance of some areas in the South (to allowing Negroes to vote) a national disgrace."

The Murray-Metcalf bill to provide federal aid for school construction and teachers' salaries served as the beginning point in the fight for education aid legislation in the 86th Congress, but was blocked by the Rules Committee. Metcalf played a key part in steering a compromise measure through the House.

While he has received a good deal of labor support in his campaigns and has introduced pro-labor legislation, Metcalf said during the 1958 labor bill debate, if this "self-policing type of legislation does not prevent abuse of these trust funds, then it will be necessary to adopt more punitive legislation."

Metcalf has been a vigorous opponent of the Eisenhower Administration fiscal policies and budget reporting policies. He said the latter made deficits appear to be smaller than they actually were. In 1959 he sponsored legislation which would have had Congress suggest a change in Treasury borrowing policy. He said the 86th Congress "acted wisely" in raising defense and armed services appropriations over the President's requested amount.

Metcalf joined the House Education and Labor Committee in 1953 and in 1955 became a member of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee as well. In 1959 he dropped both committees to join the important Ways and Means Committee. He was also a member of the House Select Astronautics and Space Exploration Committee in 1958.

Metcalf was born in Stevensville, Mont., Jan. 28, 1911. He attended Stanford University and took his law degree from Montana State. He is a lawyer by profession but has spent most of his life in public service. He was a member of the Montana legislature in 1937, spent 4½ years in the Army in World War II, served as associate justice of the Montana supreme court 1947-52 and since 1953 has represented Montana's 1st District in the House of Representatives. His winning percentages for his four elections to the House: 1952, 50.3 percent; 1954, 56.0; 1956, 62.1; 1958, 69.5.

Metcalf is married and has one son. He lives in Helena and is a Methodist.

OREGON

Mrs. Maurine B. Neuberger (D)

Mrs. Maurine Brown Neuberger, 52, said early in her campaign that she would not run as a replacement for her late husband, Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D Ore. 1955-60); the people of Oregon would vote for her on her own merits, she said, "They know me."

If the people of Oregon did not know Mrs. Neuberger even before her campaign began it was not for want of exposure to her. Aside from an active two terms in the Oregon House of Representatives (1951-55), she joined her husband in a prolific and widely published reporter-writer team specializing in problems of the American Northwest.

Mrs. Neuberger gave up her own career in 1955 when her husband came to Washington, but she worked with him, without salary, in his Capitol office. He died of a cerebral hemorrhage two days before the final filing date for the Oregon primary. Mrs. Neuberger entered and won handily over five opponents.

Health, education and consumer problems are three areas which interest her particularly. She has said she is all in favor of women being active in politics and Aug. 8. said it might be smart to elect a woman President because "women are nicer than men, mostly...I have never heard of a woman political leader being accused of corruption or engaging in questionable deals."

Mrs. Neuberger attended the Oregon College of Education in Monmouth and graduated from the University of Oregon in 1929. She was elected to Theta Sigma Phi, an honorary fraternity for women in journalism. After graduation she took post graduate work in physicial education at the University of California at Los Angeles and then taught physical education and English in Oregon high schools for 12 years before her marriage in 1945.

The daughter of a dairying family, Mrs. Neuberger while in the Oregon legislature successfully fought to end a law forbidding colored margarine in Oregon and helped to end a milk-control law which kept milk prices artificially high. She served on the state house education committee. Mrs. Neuberger is on the national board of directors of the United Nations Assn. She attended the Atlantic Congress in London in 1959.

RHODE ISLAND

Claiborne Pell (D)

Claiborne Pell, 41, startled the country and two ex-Rhode Island Governors by defeating them for the Democratic Senatorial nomination in the Sept. 28 Rhode Island primary. Unofficial totals gave Pell 61.2 percent of the vote to 33.3 percent for ex-Gov. Dennis J. Roberts (D 1951-59) and 5.5 percent for ex-Gov. J. Howard McGrath (1941-45).

Pell, who comes from a highly political family but has little political experience himself, said his primary victory was the result of "the expenditure of a great deal of shoe leather...this is what I wanted. This is the type of life, the type of work, I've had in the back of my mind since I was 20."

A young man, Pell compared his campaign to that of Democratic Presidential aspirant John F. Kennedy: "Like Kennedy, I started early and worked hard. I wasn't afraid to use my family and my friends...I think there's a trend towards, well, not necessarily young people, but towards people who look upon politics not as a profession but as a service."

In his primary campaign Pell stressed the great portion of a Senator's time taken up with foreign policy and emphasized his own considerable experience abroad. He has said he is for the $1.25 minimum wage; a periodic study of unemployment compensation rates to relate them to the rising cost of living; a Bureau of Peace Affairs in the State Department; rebuilding traditional navy and army forces to prevent depending entirely on nuclear weapons; the Forand old-age health bill; federal aid to education emphasizing raising of teaching salaries and standards; elimination of depletion allowances, cracking down on expense accounts, collecting dividend taxes at the source; creation of a national advisory council on employment of workers over 40; all legislation "leading to fullest realization of rights of all our citizens as set forth in our Constitution." He proposes a foreign policy which would treat Communist nations on an individual basis instead of putting them "into a general pool of iniquity." He said he felt it "immoral" that U-2 pilot Francis Gary Powers was given the means to commit suicide.

Pell comes from what newspapers call a "socialite Newport family." He counts four Democratic Members of Congress, as well as a Vice President (George Miffin Dallas, 1845-49), among his ancestors. His father, Herbert G. Pell, was a Representative (D N.Y. 1919-21) and minister, by appointment of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, to Portugal (1937-41) and to Hungary (1941-42).

After his graduation from Princeton in 1940, Pell went to Europe where he tried to aid those in concentration camps and was arrested several times by the Nazis. (He has also been arrested several times by the Communists for his work in iron curtain countries.) He enlisted in the Coast Guard four months before Pearl Harbor and was a lieutenant by the end of the war. He is now a commander in the Coast Guard reserves.

Pell was hospitalized in the service and brought back to the United States. He taught government in Navy and Army training schools. He was a special assistant to the State Department at the 1945 United Nations conference in San Francisco and served in the Foreign Service and State Department 1945-52, in the U.S. and in posts in Czechoslovakia and Italy. He has received awards from Portugal, Italy, and France and the Roman Catholic Church of Austria.

Pell is a Vice President of the International Rescue Committee and worked on the Hungarian border during the revolution there. He is treasurer of the American Immigration Conference, a group working for larger immigration quotas.

Pell is also a director of International Investors Inc. and a limited partner in an investment banking firm. He is a vice president of the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.

Pell was born in New York City Nov. 22, 1918. He was educated in private schools in New York and Rhode Island, where his family summered and lived often during his youth. He was graduated with honors from Princeton and received an M.A. in international administration from Columbia University in 1946. He is a linguist and campaigned in French, Portugese and Italian. He is married and the father of four children.

Women in Congress: 15 in House, 2 in Senate

The 87th Congress will have 17 women Members, equal to the record feminine contingent elected to the 84th and 86th Congresses.

Only two of the 17 will be new Members and they will have served almost two months when Congress convenes. Both Sen. Maurine B. Neuberger (D Ore.) and Rep. Julia Butler Hansen (D Wash.) ran for special election to fill unexpired terms and assumed office upon election. Mrs. Neuberger was elected to serve out the Senate term of her late husband Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D 1955-60), filled in the interim by appointee Sen. Hall Stoner Lusk (D), as well as the full term beginning in 1961. Mrs. Hansen was elected to serve out the unexpired term of the late Rep. Russell V. Mack (R), as well as the new term beginning in 1961.

Eight female Democratic Representatives won re-election, bringing the Democratic feminine corps to 10, including the two newcomers. There were seven unsuccessful Democratic women candidates for the House of Representatives and one unsuccessful Senate candidate.

Among the Democratic women losing bids for House seats was ex-Rep. Mrs. Coya Knutson (Minn. 1954-58) who lost election to a third term in 1958. Also losing were two Democrats who tried unsuccessfully for House seats in 1958.

The losing Democratic woman Senate candidate, Miss Lucia M. Cormier, opposed incumbent Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine) in Mrs. Smith's successful bid for a third Senate term. Their battle was the Nation's first woman-to-woman contest for the Senate.

The Republican feminine contingent will include six Representatives in addition to Mrs. Smith. However, two Republican Congresswomen of the 86th Congress will not return to the 87th -- Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers (Mass.), who died Sept. 10 after serving continuously in the House since 1925, and Mrs. Edna Simpson (Ill.), who announced in December 1959 that she would retire. There were two unsuccessful women Republican candidates for the House.

In all, 27 women ran for the 87th Congress -- three for the Senate (two Democrats, one Republican) and 24 for the House (16 Democrats, eight Republicans).

With both Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Neuberger in the Senate, that chamber has for the first time two women elected to full Senate terms sitting simultaneously. Two women have sat in the Senate a number of times previously, but one has always been an appointee or elected by special election to occupy a seat made vacant by retirement or death.

AUG. 4 -- Sen. Kefauver (D Tenn.) beats segregationist opponent by unexpectedly large margin in primary. Nixon begins campaign with tour of Hawaii.

AUG. 8 -- Senate opens post-convention session, hears message from President asking increased funds for mutual security and Latin American development program, enactment of remaining parts of his 1960 program.

AUG. 15 -- House convenes post-convention session, adjourns for lack of quorum for first time in 15 years; quorum not present until Aug. 22.
AUG. 17 -- President sees no evidence of "brainwashing" in guilty plea of U-2 pilot Powers on trial in Moscow.
AUG. 18 -- Senate passes Kennedy-promoted minimum wage bill.
AUG. 23 -- Senate rejects, 44-51, medical aid plan based on social security system favored by Democratic presidential ticket and platform, also rejects Nixon-backed plan, accepts more limited state-aid program.
AUG. 26 -- AFL-CIO board endorses Kennedy slate.
AUG. 29 -- Nixon hospitalized with infected knee.
AUG. 30 -- Senate-House conferees give up on minimum wage bill, Kennedy refusing to accept House version.

SEPT. 1 -- Congress adjourns; neither party can claim much accomplishment; cut in Dominican sugar quota barred by House-Senate disagreement.
SEPT. 2 -- Lodge resigns UN post, starts campaign tour.
SEPT. 5 -- Earl Long (D La.) dies, 9 days after winning run-off for House seat.
SEPT. 6 -- Appearance at Moscow press conference of two defecting U.S. intelligence employees brings White House description of them as "self-confessed traitors".
SEPT. 7 -- Eisenhower reprimands Russia for "aggravating" the Congo confusion, says U.S. supports UN efforts whole-heartedly. Statement by Protestant conferees on religious freedom, led by Norman Vincent Peale, says Catholic president would be under "extreme pressure" to follow political policies of his church.
SEPT. 10 -- Rep. Edith Nourse Rogers (R Mass.) dies.
SEPT. 11 -- Nixon says it would be tragic if election were decided on religious grounds.
SEPT. 12 -- Speaking to Texas Protestant ministers, Kennedy reiterates support for separation of church and state, denies church pressures on him.
SEPT. 13 -- Sen. Hennings (D Mo.) dies.
SEPT. 14 -- Rep. Preston (D Ga. 1st Dist.) defeated in primary.
SEPT. 20 -- Khrushchev's appearance in NYC for UN General Assembly meeting brings plea from Nixon that Kennedy forego remarks that "tend to disparage America".
SEPT. 22 -- Eisenhower proposes broad peace program before UN audience including K, Castro and Tito.
SEPT. 23 -- Khrushchev's General Assembly speech, calling for replacement of Secretary-General Hammarskjold and removal of the UN from the U.S., is described by Sec. Herter as a "declaration of war against the structure and personnel" of the UN. Lt. Gov. Edward V. Long (D Mo.) named to Sen. Hennings' seat.
SEPT. 26 -- First Nixon-Kennedy TV debate, on domestic policies, draws audience estimated at 73,500,000. Castro in 4½-hour UN speech says Cuba may seek withdrawal of U.S. naval base there.
SEPT. 28 -- Sec. of Treasury Anderson gives favorable short and long-term report on U.S. economy to World Bank meeting. R.I. Democrats elect Claiborne Pell as Senate candidate.
